£13 MILLION ACHIEVEMENT

One hundred orders signed for I.C.T. 1900 Series computers in ten weeks!

Since the I.C.T. 1900 Series was announced at the end of September, orders have been coming in at the rate of over £1 million a week. The magic '100' figure was notched up with an order from the Ministry of Aviation. Other significant facts: twenty-eight of the hundred are going for export; and first delivery will be in January (to the Northampton College of Advanced Technology).

THE TRUTH ABOUT BUYING A COMPUTER

No one invests in a computer until he's had all the facts about it and given them a hard—even hostile—going over. That a hundred very different organisations have already chosen I.C.T. 1900 Series computers is a remarkable triumph for this new British range.

If you're hovering on the brink of buying a computer, why not send for a brochure, or ask us to send someone to call on you? (We will prove to you, for example, that the I.C.T. 1900 Series is a sound long-term investment, whether your need is in the field of Management Science, or concerns individual scientific, technical or commercial applications.)

Basic Tasks for 1965

WITH the seventh balance of payments crisis which the United Kingdom has experienced since 1945 barely surmounted, it is inevitable that the probable trend of events in 1965 has a more than passing interest. Certainly it is difficult, if not impossible, for any rational observer of the economic scene to feel sanguine about the prospect. The new economic administration may succeed in developing more purposeful planning techniques; a rather better rate of economic growth than in the past year is possible; higher taxes are probable; but the continuing inflation is certain.

Such expectations are based not so much on any predictive method as such, but on the assumption that the circumstances and factors which have generated the past crises, including the latest one, are not likely suddenly to disappear. For example, Britain's share in the expanding world trade in manufactured goods has been declining continuously over the past decade. What reasons are there for assuming that in 1965 the trend will at long last be reversed? Likewise, the level of industrial production for most of the past year has remained static, although the number of registered unemployed in the economy has gradually declined and is now barely 1·5 per cent of the insured working population. There is clearly considerable slack and under-utilization of both plant capacity and labour in British industry but, without a major expansion of exports, any significant upsurge in the level of economic activity could only generate further price increases and balance of payments difficulties.

While it may be true that there is no single cause of Britain's economic malaise, one or two factors play a dominant role. Whatever the limitations of the recent statement of intent on productivity, prices and incomes, it cannot be denied that it spotlights the basic weaknesses of the British economy. It requires a 'sustained attack on obstacles to efficiency' on the part of both labour and of management. It requires increases in wages, salaries and other incomes 'to be kept in line with increased national output' and conditions to ensure that 'British industry is dynamic and its prices competitive'. All that now needs to be done is to translate these aspirations into realities.

What are the chances that 1965 will witness a new 'industrial revolution'? There is certainly precious little in the news from the industrial scene during the closing days of 1964 to suggest that any change is imminent. Pay awards, first to railwaymen and later to the Post Office engineers, are considerably in excess of any productivity increase likely to be achieved during the coming year.

The comment and gossip that has surrounded the abortive efforts to transfer Dr BEECHING to the office of supreme transport co-ordinator suggests that union co-operation, when the streamlining of an industry will entail substantial redundancy and changes in working habits, is not so easily come by. The Times, in a report from the coal-mining industry noted that mechanization had raised earnings in some pits excessively, owing to the fact that rates were based on the old-style methods of extraction. The management had so far, however, been unwilling to revise the outdated scales for fear of labour unrest.

Most observers of the industrial scene agree that Britain's scarcest natural resource, labour, is extensively wasted. The steel industry and the docks are only two industries in which there would be considerable redundancy if economic criteria alone determined the manning of machines and plant. It is quite pointless for Government spokesmen to harp on the need for technological advance when its benefits are likely to be limited by widespread restrictive practices. Likewise, the 'more vigorous policies' designed to facilitate mobility of labour – to quote the statement of intent – need to be brought into being very soon. It is idle to pretend that even a Labour administration is going to be able to change the thinking of union members on such topics as these in the short run. But, unfortunately, time is not on Britain's side.

The question of greatest significance for 1965 is whether sterling will be devalued or not. Already the entire borrowing of $1,000 million from the International Monetary Fund is believed to have been committed in defence of sterling. The much publicized international bankers' loan of $3,000 million is an invaluable counter-speculative masse de manoeuvre in the world's foreign exchange markets. But, quite apart from the fact that such borrowings, if used, have to be repaid, no amount of borrowing can in the long run hold an unrealistic exchange rate. Just before Christmas, forward sterling was being sold quite heavily and unless the trade returns very soon display a much healthier appearance with exports on a rising plane, then, short of extensive controls over currency and trade, the existing exchange rate of sterling will become impossible to hold.

It is, of course, natural and sensible for ministers to repeat assurances that they do not intend to devalue. The point is that they will have no option unless they can create economic conditions which justify the existing exchange rates. The prospect of such a development is not improved by the need to hold Bank rate at 7 per cent, or the reminder from the authorities to the clearing banks that they should watch their lending policies. Such developments are not consistent with economic growth, or with recurrent assertions that the Government is not reviving the 'stop–go' policy of former days.

The basic problem of the United Kingdom economy as it enters the New Year is one of confidence. It is all too easy to talk about technological innovation to be induced by tax cuts, etc. but, unless industry can entertain rational hopes regarding the profitable utilization of new plant and equipment, no amount of tax relief will persuade it to invest. Whether the City is justified in displaying its present state of nerves over Mr CALLAGHAN's proposals is a matter of opinion. The fact is, however, that this widespread uncertainty is communicating itself to industry.

It cannot be too often stressed that the Government's function is to generate and maintain economic conditions which enable both sides of industry to work most effectively. It is not the function of the Government to produce and export. For all these things it is dependent on industry, most of it in the private sector. The task of Government is to govern, but in a free society this cannot be done effectively either by so-called dynamic planning or directives. Whether the PRIME MINISTER's recent appeal for a revival of the spirit of Dunkirk was apposite or not, it recognized the simple fact that unless both sides of industry unite in a common effort to produce efficiently, then the economy will continue to drift.

In short, what happens in 1965 will depend on what happens in the next few months, possibly even the next few weeks, to reassure informed opinion, both at home and abroad, that the Government not only has a plan, but is able and prepared to carry it out. And, as the Bank of England Quarterly Bulletin has pointed out, 'success will not come without an unusual readiness on the part of all concerned to discard long-standing attitudes and traditions of thought'.

E.D.P. and Management Information in Local Government

CONTRIBUTED

A REPORT issued last summer by a working party of The Society of County Treasurers[1] makes interesting reading, particularly for accountants employed in local government, although the computer applications suggested are not confined to financial matters.

The report describes problems which have to be faced when selecting and installing a computer; and a section dealing with the scope of work which a computer may handle includes the following non-financial work: (a) traffic surveys and road network planning; (b) school and general health statistics; (c) criminal and finger-print records; (d) examination and selection of children for secondary education; (e) bridge and road design calculations; (f) bills of quantities.

The application of E.D.P. to such non-financial tasks is in line with the trend towards an integrated municipal management information service for local government managers and accountants alike, which is the general theme of this article.

Municipal Computers

The local government service tends to hide its light under a bushel. It is usually considered rather hide-bound and old-fashioned. In fact, within the restrictions imposed by various legal requirements, in certain activities it may be ahead of private enterprise. For example, before budgetary control was generally accepted, municipal corporations were preparing annual rate estimates under appropriate headings and controlling expenditure thereby. More recently, in the field of E.D.P., local government has been in the forefront, often using a computer before its commercial cousins had become E.D.P.-minded. As an example, Norwich City Council has operated a computer since 1957; not many companies can make a similar claim.

Uses to which a computer may be put in the local government service naturally varies with the size of the authority and its particular responsibilities. Thus a county council has a different pattern of responsibility and operation from, say, a non-county borough. Generally speaking, financial applications up to the present time have been in the spheres of costing, stores accounting, payroll, rating demands, budgetary control, etc.

Let us take a quick look at an existing computer installation which has been operating for several years in a county borough with a population of some 125,000 people. The computer – an older, first generation model – has been operating successfully on rate demands, creditors' accounts and financial accounting records. More recently, the payroll and bonus records for about 2,400 manual workers have been taken over, and cost accounting activities have commenced.

The following statistics may serve to put this latter application into perspective: in addition to the cost-analysis work on the 2,400 weekly time-sheets, about 175,000 stores issues are made annually and 40,000 lorry and plant sheets are used each year. Costs are analysed under 3,500 semi-permanent expenditure headings (for work lasting a year or even longer), or to 8,000 special works orders which are mainly for smaller building maintenance jobs.

Because it is an older and slower computer, two shifts are worked and it is possible that in the future full three-shift working will be necessary. The E.D.P. staff, who come under the borough treasurer, consist of a section head, a chief programmer and about five programmers and computer operators as well as six tape perforator operators. There is also a resident technician. The number of programmers has varied due to staff turnover which has brought about problems of job continuity.

With so many computers being installed in industry generally, skilled programmers are enticed away by offers of higher salaries. Thus, up to the present time, the uses to which municipal computers have been put are probably very similar to the applications in commercial concerns. However, as the recent County Treasurers' report shows, the areas of application are now tending to enlarge from those of accounting work and financial statistics, to cover a much wider field.

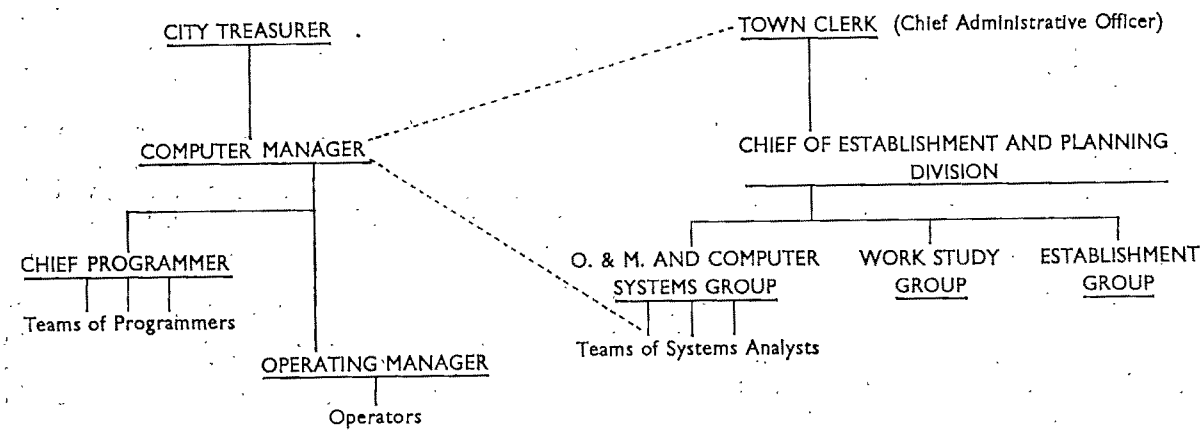
An example of this is provided by a new E.D.P. installation which is being planned for a medium-sized city. This 'case-study' city has a population of about 250,000 and it is expanding. In providing the full range of municipal activities – public health, education, engineering, highways, sewage disposal, security in the form of a city police force, etc. – the municipal council employs some 15,000 persons, monthly or weekly paid. Like most local authorities, it has used punched-card accounting for many years and has graduated via a multiplying punch and an electronic calculator to the computer.

The computer for this city – a second-generation model with core storage and floating-point arithmetic – is to be delivered next year. Input will be via paper/magnetic tape, while the output will be solely by magnetic tape. A high-speed line printer is also on order. The proposed applications involve close co-operation with departments outside the treasurer's department and, indeed, the whole staffing pattern is different from the arrangements considered above regarding the older-style installation. It is envisaged that future staffing arrangements for a municipal E.D.P. system will develop along the lines indicated in the accompanying chart (below).



The proposed staffing arrangement chart illustrates the trend towards thinking of an overall E.D.P. system for municipal activities, and away from the purely financial uses of a computer. It is probable that as the system develops, a need will arise for operational research experts to be added to the establishment and planning division. In addition, technical officers from departments such as the city engineer's department, would receive training in programming and in O.R. As municipal E.D.P. systems develop, applications such as those listed at the beginning of this article from the County Treasurer's report would be introduced.

Future Trend

A municipal officer recently commented that 'Our records are loaded with vital statistics which are not being usefully employed because we cannot get our hands on them sufficiently readily'. This crie de coeur would probably be echoed by his contemporaries in industry. Another problem is that of lack of co-ordination.

The computer is possibly the only answer to

PROPOSED STAFFING ARRANGEMENTS FOR A MUNICIPAL E.D.P. SYSTEM

NOTES.

The programming, operating and systems staff work together as parts of the team.

The establishment and planning division of the town clerk's department will have the responsibility for developing applications for the E.D.P. system. The computer manager's staff of the city treasurer's department will be responsible for providing the E.D.P. service.

The computer manager will have a responsibility to the town clerk in the latter's capacity as chief administrative officer of the corporation. There will be a close liaison between the computer manager and the teams of systems analysts of the town clerk's department. In fact, one qualification which has been proposed is for the systems analysts to come under the direct control of the computer manager. Thus, the alternative pattern would be that the town clerk's O. & M. group suggest applications, and these would be developed by the treasurer's staff of systems analysts and programmers.

these twin problems of co-ordinating and of usefully employing vital records. As an example of this co-ordination of data by a computer in the local government service, information could be used for rating purposes by the treasurer's department, for land charges by the town clerk, for planning approval by the municipal surveyor, and finally by the education officer for estimating future school-age population patterns.

The special programs for these data-processing runs would be prepared by technical officers from the departments concerned or, in the case of overlapping programs, by the programming staff of the treasurer's department. In any event the computer would continue to be operated by members of the treasurer's staff, although the technical officers would be on hand when their programs were run.

One municipal activity which, it is suggested, warrants closer attention is that of inventory control. The costs involved in holding stock – materials handling and re-stocking, storage space expenses, security charges, losses through deterioration or obsolescence, interest on capital tied up, etc. – are such that tight control is most important. On the other side of the picture are the costs and delays resulting from a 'stock-out' of an important stores item. The computer offers local government – in the industrial field – the chance to operate an efficient inventory control system with frequent runs to point out those items not within the upper or lower limits of agreed stock levels. Another salutory exercise is to express existing stocks in terms of so many months' supply at the present 'going-rate' of usage. Naturally, account would be taken of any abnormal usage which can be anticipated, or of seasonal usage items such as grit and salt for icy roads in the winter.

The installation of computers is proceeding apace in local government throughout the country in order to meet the call for greater efficiency. Coupled with the increasing use of E.D.P. there will be an increasing activity in the development of municipal management information services in the future.

It is hoped that these observations will be of interest to accountants in industry who are facing similar information service problems in their own sphere.

Winding-up Orders

STATUTE LAW OR COMMON LAW?

by J. R. LEWIS, LL.B., A.C.C.S.
Lecturer in Law, Plymouth College of Technology

THE basic relationship between a shareholder and the company in which he has invested is a contractual one. The shareholder undertakes to supply to the company a limited amount of capital, on the understanding that the business of the company will be confined to certain specified objects, and that the affairs of the company will be managed by persons who will be elected in a prescribed manner.

In such contracts as these, as in all other contracts, the ordinary common law rules as to discharge by frustration and discharge by breach apply, so that if the objects of the company become impossible of performance or if the company is in breach of its undertakings, the shareholder will be placed in a position whereby he might regard his contractual relationship with the company as at an end.

It sometimes occurs, however, that the company finds itself running downhill quickly, and the shareholders are in danger of losing the capital which they have contributed to the company. The remedy then open to the shareholders is to call for a voluntary winding-up of the company. Before this is possible there must be a majority of three-quarters of the members in agreement for the step to be taken and quite obviously this is not always possible. How then can the individual shareholder take steps to retrieve some of the capital he has invested before it is completely lost?

He is, in fact, attempting to relieve himself of the liabilities that he has undertaken in entering into the contract with the company in the first place and the judicial attitude to such questions is well summed up by James, L.J.:

> 'It really is very important to these companies that the Court should not, unless a very strong case is made, take upon itself to interfere with the domestic forum which has been established for the management of the affairs of the company.' (Re Langham Skating Rink Co (1877) 5 Ch.D. 669.)

The reluctance of the Courts to interfere is qualified by the words 'unless a very strong case is made', and as far as the shareholder seeking release from his contractual obligations is concerned the opportunity to present a strong case to the Court is facilitated by section 222 (f) of the Companies Act, 1948, which authorizes the Court to make an order for the compulsory winding-up of a company whenever the Court is of opinion that it is just and equitable that the company should be wound up.

An alternative method to bring about the dissolution of the company from the voluntary winding-up by consent of three-quarters of the members is thus provided, but the application of this section is, in fact, based upon the qualifications that are inherent in the contractual relationship between the company and the shareholder, which may be summarized as follows:

(a) the company will remain able to carry on the business specified in its objects;
(b) that the company will continue to carry on such business;
(c) that the business will be carried on in a legal and honest manner.

The application of these qualifications to the contract between company and shareholder may be illustrated by reference to the case law which has arisen around the question of winding-up of companies under section 222 (f) of the 1948 Act.

Ability to Continue

The leading case on the question of the capability of the company to carry on its business is Re German Date Coffee Co ((1882) 20 Ch.D. 151). The main object of the company was to acquire in Germany the patent for a process for the making of ersatz coffee from dates and the subsequent commercial use of that patent. The company was unable to obtain the patent but, by consent of the majority of the shareholders, it nevertheless went ahead and carried on the manufacture of such coffee in Germany. Yet on a petition by a shareholder the Court called for the winding-up of the company, since the main object for which the company had been formed had proved to be impossible to carry out. The principle was succinctly put by Kay, J., in Re Red Rock G.M. Co ([1889] 61 L.T. 785):

'. . . when an association is formed for a particular purpose it does not matter that it has large powers in addition to that particular purpose; if that particular purpose fails, any shareholder has the right to say: "Put an end to it, pay me my money".'

In both these cases physical impossibility rendered the application of the Act possible, but a similar result can be obtained as a result of financial and economic factors. In Pirie v. Stewart ([1904] 6 F. 847) a shipping company lost its only vessel and its financial state offered no prospect of it being able to obtain another: an order for winding-up was made.

Continuance of Business

The second qualification noted above was that the company must continue to carry on the business. Such activity may well be rendered impossible by personal animosities that arise between the directors. A deadlock arising from such internal disputes may well lead to a petition for the winding-up of the company. In public companies the question is not really of great importance since a deadlock can be resolved by the simple expedient of the election of a new board of directors or, where the articles will allow, the appointment of an additional director. The disputed questions can always be put to decision of the majority in the general meeting of the company.

In the realm of the private company, the leading case is Re Yenidje Tobacco Co ([1916] 2 Ch. 426 (C.A.)) where the two directors, the only shareholders, were not even speaking to each other. In spite of the fact that the business was still prospering, the Court of Appeal was unanimous in ordering the winding-up of the company, so that here the Court was going even further in its interpretation of the contractual relationship than would seem apparent at first sight.

Misconduct

The third qualification to the contractual relationship between company and shareholder is that the business should be carried on legally and honestly, so that if the directors or other persons in control of the company indulge in any misconduct or fraudulent behaviour in the management of the company, a petition for winding-up would be successful before the Court.

An obvious example occurs where the directors or controlling shareholders misappropriate company property by making unauthorized payments out of company funds. Another example might be pointed to, i.e. where directors have committed breaches of their fiduciary duty to the company in that they have exercised the powers given to them for the benefit of the company for their own personal gain. Thus, the earning of profits not disclosed to the shareholders generally would fall under this head, as would a director's action in using a power of dismissal to exclude a fellow director from the company in order that his shares might be acquired at less than their value.

Should the directors fail to conduct the business of the company according to the procedural requirements of the Act or of the articles of association in such matters as, for instance, the holding of general meetings and the appointment of auditors, or the issue of balance sheets, then here again the petition for winding-up would be restated, in principle by the Courts. As Lord Clyde in Thomson v. Drysdale ([1925] S.C. 311):

> '... any case in which the shareholders who hold the preponderating interest in a company make it manifest that they intend to set at nought the security provided by company procedure, and to treat the company and its affairs as if they were their own property, it is impossible that the minority should retain any confidence in the impartiality or probity of the company's administration and ... it becomes a question whether the minority are not entitled as a matter of justice or equity to have the company wound up.'

It must be emphasized, however, that the misconduct of the directors must be such as to cause the shareholders to lose confidence in the honesty of the management; in other words, the misconduct must be of such a degree and kind as to render alternative methods of dealing with the matter impracticable. Only then will an order under section 222 (f) be made, so that mere dissatisfaction, for instance, at being outvoted on a matter concerning the domestic policy of the company would not entitle a petition to be brought for winding-up.

On the other hand, oppressive action on the part of the directors would justify such a petition. If it is simply a valid exercise of a power conferred upon him by the articles, the director is justified in holding out against any such petition and section 222 (f) will not be applied (Charles Forte Investments Ltd v. Amanda ([1963] 3 W.L.R. 662)).

Contractual Position

But is section 222 (f) necessary at all? The provision as to the Courts being able to wind up companies on just and equitable grounds first appeared in the Winding Up Act, 1848. It was then incorporated into section 9 (5) of the Companies Act, 1862, and then carried through into the 1948 Act. There are two different approaches that might be made when one looks at the question of winding-up on this ground, however; one might simply take as a starting-point the 1948 Act itself and look at the case law in the light of section 222 (f); or one might disregard the section and look at the case law in the light of general contractual principles – principles that have been worked out by the common law itself.

When the latter approach is adopted a singular effect is observed. We have seen that the contractual relationship entered into by the company and the shareholder is a qualified one and the qualifications have been discussed. While these qualifications remain unimpaired in practice, the individual shareholder has no right to go back on his bargain and repudiate the obligations placed upon him by his contract. He cannot bring about the winding-up of the company other than by the normal three-quarter majority consent. It is only when unforeseen events occur to destroy one or more of the qualifications upon which the contract depends, that the shareholder can present his petition to the Court. It is only when the conduct of the business becomes impossible, it is only when the directors are not on speaking terms, it is only when the probity of the management is doubted, that a petition can be presented.

Tautology

But it is hardly necessary, under these conditions, that recourse should be had to section 222 (f) of the 1948 Act, for the remedy already lies to hand in the general law of contract. When an unforeseen event occurs which has the effect of rendering the performance of the contract impossible or commercially different from that contemplated by the parties to that contract, the agreement between the parties is said to have been discharged by frustration. Again, where one of the parties to a contract acts dishonestly, or in flagrant breach of one of the conditions upon which the original agreement is based, the party who relies upon such conduct to bring an end to the agreement can do so under the doctrine of discharge by breach.

When once the contractual basis of the agreement between shareholder and company is recognized, therefore, it must surely follow that the normal rules as to discharge by breach and discharge by frustration must apply – as indeed, discharge by performance does, as is illustrated in Re Amalgamated Syndicate ([1897] 2 Ch. 600) where a company was wound up because it had achieved its sole object. If this is the case, surely section 222 (f) of the Companies Act, 1948, can be little more than tautological.

The Corporation Tax – V

CONTRIBUTED

DIVIDENDS paid out of the exempt trading income of overseas trade corporations are grossed up and assessed to United Kingdom income tax under Case VI of Schedule D at the standard rate in force for the year when the dividend was due. But the tax on dividends is offset by double taxation relief so that the dividends are a net cost to the company.

As most overseas trade corporations are tea, rubber, or tin mining companies, the cover for their dividends (saving exceptions) is on the slim side, but is counterbalanced by high yields. Under the new system of taxation, companies generally with overseas income are to be allowed relief only against corporation tax and will pay their dividends gross. If overseas status is abandoned, plantation and mining companies will be in the same boat as other companies and will be paying gross dividends after deduction of overseas tax amounting to 40 per cent in Malaya, 55 per cent in Pakistan, 60 per cent in India and around 80 per cent in Ceylon. Clearly, there will be many cases where dividends or retentions are going to suffer.

If the rate of corporation tax works out at around 35 per cent, overseas investment in most countries will be penalized as compared with investment at home, and overseas trade corporations will be the worst sufferers because of the preponderance of their income from abroad. Small wonder, therefore, that a correspondent in The Financial Times of November 18th urges double taxation relief for shareholders representing the excess of foreign tax over corporation tax.

Foreign Exchange

But if Mr Callaghan's tax proposals bear heavily on overseas income, the domestic repercussions on company and shareholder are not the only ones. Investment overseas, mainly in the sterling area, represents 20–25 per cent of the United Kingdom's total capital formation and runs into very large figures. It is not confined to planting or mining but is becoming increasingly concerned with local manufacture in countries where high tariffs shut out British exports.

Since the third article in this series (which referred to the position of investment trusts) appeared (December 19th issue), the annual statement of the chairman of Scottish Investment Trust, Mr Eric J. Ivory, has been circulated to shareholders. It makes interesting and informative reading. Mr Ivory says the dollar holdings of all the investment trusts in this country total and yield an annual income of $1,900 million. He stresses the point that trusts which $49 million. He stresses benefit their shareholders, invest abroad not only b[illegible]eir country in that but render a service to th[illegible]able and growing remitted income forms a valu[illegible]the growth of invisible export. How sharp is [illegible]wn by the dollar investments and income is sho[illegible]ttish experience of the Scottish and Second Sc[illegible]eir companies. In 1948, the combined value of their dollar stocks was $822,000, but at the date of the most recent valuation it had risen to $64·9 million. During the same period remitted income (after deduction of withholding tax) grew from $48,000 to $1·6 million, and over the whole period was $13·8 million. He says the benefit his companies received from double taxation relief was a powerful inducement to them to hold American investments and underlines the influence which taxation considerations have on investment decision. He makes an urgent plea, like the chairman of Consolidated African Selection Trust, that the impending changes in British taxation should do nothing to discourage overseas investment.

While Mr George Brown is busying himself with export incentives and Mr Callaghan's proposals are acting as disincentives to invisible exports, it has recently been reported from New York that, according to a study made by Booz Allen & Hamilton, the management consultants, America has achieved new peaks in investment abroad this year and has established 372 new units in foreign countries during the first six months. As is well known, America is also taking steps to prolong its four-year boom by cutting taxation.

Small Companies

In The Accountant of December 19th, a correspondent referred to the dangers to which small and medium-sized companies may be exposed under the new system of taxation. At present, where a company's profits arising in any chargeable accounting period of twelve months do not exceed £2,000, the profits are deemed to be reduced to nil for profits tax purposes; and where the profits exceed £2,000 but do not exceed £12,000 they are deemed to be reduced according to a formula which operates in such a way that the tax rises progressively from nil at £2,000 until the full rate of 15 per cent is reached when the profits amount to £12,000. Since the principle underlying profits tax is that it is a counterpoise in the case of companies to the surtax payable by individuals, there is also exemption from profits tax of such of the profits of a company as have been the subject of an apportionment following a surtax direction.

The correspondent argues the case for some relief for the smaller companies under the new system of taxation, and contends that the present ceiling figures for directors' remuneration for profits tax purposes in the case of director-controlled companies should be increased considerably, since they were fixed before the surtax exemption limit on earned incomes was raised from £2,000 to £5,000. His arguments are well founded and there are precedents for a reduced rate of corporation tax on small companies in Canada and the United States. Indeed, if some concession along these lines is not made by the Chancellor, it would appear that some companies with quite small incomes will be better off unincorporated.

The correspondent then went on to say:

> 'It also seems clear that all companies will be potentially liable to income tax directions and not only those companies where there is a potential surtax liability.'

If the words 'all companies' include companies which are not 'controlled' companies, this contributor does not agree, since the Chancellor's statement in this context refers to 'certain types of companies, including the so-called "one-man" companies', which presumably refers to 'controlled' companies, with or without an extension of the meaning of such companies.

But if the correspondent is saying, in effect, that under the new system of taxation the accounts of all companies now potentially liable to surtax directions will be closely scrutinized to see whether income is withheld from distribution not only 'with a view to preventing the avoidance of the payment of surtax', but also with a view to preventing the loss of income tax, he is undoubtedly right; since undistributed income will be worth 20*s* in the £ to the company, whereas distributed income will only be worth that amount less income tax.

All this, of course, will involve an enormous increase in work on the part of the Revenue; the provisions of section 246 of the Income Tax Act, 1952, which prescribe the tests of adequacy of distribution of income for surtax purposes, will have to be amended, and some nice questions will arise as to whether or not a particular distribution is reasonable in the circumstances of the case. No doubt a distribution which was 'reasonable' for surtax purposes will no longer be reasonable for income tax purposes, and a company will not know for years after the end of the 'year or other period for which accounts have been made up' whether or not it is out of the woods. In the view of this contributor, and apparently of some City institutions, it will be extremely difficult for a profit-making company to avoid the payment of some dividend.

Directors' Remuneration

For income tax purposes the only restrictions on the deduction of directors' remuneration in computing a company's trading profits is that the remuneration must represent an expense incurred wholly and exclusively for the purpose of the company's trade (Income Tax Act, 1952, section 137) and be reasonable (Copeman v. William Flood & Sons Ltd (19 A.T.C. 521; 24 T.C. 43)). These restrictions also apply for profits tax purposes but additional restrictions (the 'ceiling figures') are imposed in the case of director-controlled companies and are related to the type of director, that is, whether (a) whole-time service director, (b) full-time working director, or (c) other director.

What then will be the position of directors of controlled companies under the new system of taxation? Will the ceiling figures of remuneration go with profits tax or will they be retained and, suitably adjusted, made applicable to all controlled companies whether director-controlled or not? Or will the general rules as to deductions for income tax purposes apply? A reasonable solution would be for the ceilings (whether raised or not) to be retained in the case of director-controlled companies and for the present income tax rules to apply to other controlled companies. But in view of the 'separation of company taxation from personal taxation' there must be a danger of the extension of ceiling figures of some kind to all controlled companies.

Capital Allowances

In the Chancellor's statement – itself a masterpiece of inscrutability – pride of place for brevity and obscurity is easily won by the reference to capital allowances, which merely says that:

> 'capital allowances will be given for corporation tax purposes on the same lines as for income tax'.

This has been generally construed as meaning that capital allowances are to be devalued so that £100 will be worth £62·2. Put in another way, what now costs the Revenue £53⅓ will henceforth only cost them £35. If one turns for enlightenment to the Memorandum of Dissent of the minority members of the Royal Commission on Taxation one finds this statement:

> 'We wish to dissent from the following principal recommendations in the report:
> 217 (55) relief for unexhausted capital allowances and investment allowances against other income for any future year.'

On the other hand, Mr Harold Wilson has been reported as speaking at Swansea last January of 'selective' investment allowances for companies doing the 'right' things, whatever that may mean. Perhaps it is that companies which make the fullest use of automation will be encouraged, while those who do not will be penalized.

From the Chancellor himself there is not a clue as to how far capital allowances and unused losses for income tax and profits tax may be carried forward to corporation tax, but some guidance, particularly in relation to capital allowances for profits tax, may possibly be derived from the White Paper, A Scheme for an Accounts Basis for Income Tax on Company Profits (1964, Cmnd 2347) referred to in the second article in this series (December 12th issue).

One thing is certain: the effect of the Chancellor's announcement regarding capital allowances is thoroughly discouraging to industry. How discouraging is perhaps summed up in the words of Lord Plowden at the annual meeting of Tube Investments. He said:

> 'It appears that the capital allowances will be less valuable and therefore investment in new plant less attractive. Specific taxes apart, there can be little doubt that the Government's recent measures . . . will make the industrial world more cautious. This mood of caution is shared by your Board.'

It will certainly not be surprising if directors devote themselves to thoughts of tax and tightening credit. But then the economy seems to have entered upon a deflationary phase, so perhaps capital allowances are not all that important just now.

Conclusion

In this series it has been impossible to cover all the likely effects of the new tax. Building societies may possibly fare better, since they may pay less tax on their surpluses. Loan capital will, in effect, cost more, since the reduction in tax will mean that the company will bear more of the interest charge. Payments to charity under deed of covenant will be payable gross and so will cost companies more, with the obvious result that the number of covenantors will decline. While dividends received by parent companies from United Kingdom subsidiaries will be treated as 'franked' income for corporation tax purposes, the treatment of dividends from one United Kingdom company to another is still under consideration and is causing concern.

On balance, it is difficult to work up any enthusiasm for the corporation tax, the manner of its introduction, or its timing. The content of the proposals is open to the objections referred to in these articles. The tax itself, made known in outline form in the current year of assessment, is to be enacted in the next following year of assessment; but the rate of tax, if the Chancellor adheres to his present intention, is not to be divulged until the year of assessment after that, namely, in the 1966 Budget.

The announcement of the new tax was made known in the Budget Speech of November 11th, within weeks of the Chancellor's assuming office, against (i) the majority recommendations of the Royal Commission (1955, Cmd 9474), and (ii) as regards previously considered forms of corporation tax, the very recent advice of industry (White Paper, 1964, Cmnd 2347). Moreover, there is every reason to suppose that the intention to impose the new tax was formed in advance of much official thinking on the subject, so that the latter has followed limpingly behind the former. But it will have to break into a pretty brisk trot if corporation tax and capital gains tax are to be embodied in the next Finance Bill. Both will involve provisions of great length and complexity and therein lies the danger of hasty legislation involving several amendments for years to come.

All tax changes have a disruptive effect upon business until they are 'absorbed', and the more fundamental they are and the greater their number, the more disturbing they become. Businessmen have an axiom that it is a bad thing to have too many problems on one's plate at the same time. On this basis it would clearly have been better to introduce changes of the magnitude proposed after the balance of payments problem had been solved and confidence had been restored. As it is, it can only be hoped that modifications of the Chancellor's proposals before they reach the statute book will result in something more acceptable.

Overseas Company Tax Rates

The following table, prepared by the Statistics and Intelligence Division of the Board of Inland Revenue and reproduced by permission of the Board, attempts to set out the latest known rates of the 'standard' or maximum rate of tax charged on the income of companies by the countries listed. In some cases there may be special rates for particular forms of company and for companies carrying on special trades e.g. insurance, oil.

Where more than one tax is levied, e.g. surcharges, excess profits tax, an indication of the rate is given in the 'Notes' column. Where 'slab' scales apply a note of the starting rate is given: space does not permit of the full range being shown.

Local taxes are not taken into account except in those few countries where they form a considerable part of the tax burden.

Country	Rate per cent	Notes
ADEN	32·5
ALGERIA	54	Includes 20 per cent surcharge – northern areas only.
ANTIGUA	40
ARGENTINA	38·36	Plus emergency surcharge 20 per cent on profits over $50,000.
AUSTRALIA	42·5	On excess over £A5,000[1].
AUSTRIA	51·92	44 per cent on profits over 500,000 schillings (reduced rates of 24·30 and 40 per cent) plus Equalization of Burdens tax of 18 per cent of tax.
BAHAMAS	—	Not levied.
BARBADOS	40	Also Trade Tax 18·5 per cent (local income tax).
BASUTOLAND	37·5	30 per cent on first R.8,000.
BECHUANALAND	30
BELGIUM	30	25 per cent on undistributed profits under 1 million francs. 35 per cent on that part of undistributed profits over 5 million francs.
BERMUDA	—	Not levied.
BOLIVIA	25
BRAZIL	28	Also Excess Profits Tax, dependent on ratio of profits to capital. Plus compulsory loan of 15 per cent of tax.
BRITISH GUIANA	55	Includes 10 per cent National Development Savings Levy.
BRITISH HONDURAS	40
BRITISH SOLOMON ISLANDS	7·5
BRUNEI	30
BURMA	99	On profits over 300,000 kyats. 98 per cent on income between 100,000 and 300,000 kyats. Scale begins at 7 per cent on profits over 1,500 kyats. Non-resident companies minimum rate 65 per cent.
CAMBODIA	25
CAMEROUN (EAST)	27·5	Includes 10 per cent surcharge.
CAMEROUN (WEST)	40
CANADA	50	Includes Old Age Security Tax. 21 per cent on first $35,000. 15 per cent Undistributed Profits Tax. Plus provincial taxes 9–12 per cent for which 9 per cent tax credit given against federal tax.
CAYMAN IS.	—	Not levied.
CENTRAL AFRICAN REPUBLIC	31·36	Commercial companies: others 31·05 per cent. Includes 15 per cent local surcharge.
CEYLON	57	Resident companies, plus 33⅓ per cent on distribution profits.
	63	Non-resident companies, plus 33⅓ per cent on remittances (maximum 33⅓ per cent × ½ taxable income).
CHAD	33	Commercial companies. Others 27·5 per cent. Includes 10 per cent local surcharge. Minimum tax 300,000 to 6 million fr. depending on turnover.
CHANNEL IS.	—	See Guernsey and Jersey.

SIR NICHOLAS E. WATERHOUSE, K.B.E.

SIR NICHOLAS EDWIN WATERHOUSE, K.B.E., M.A., F.C.A., died in the Nuffield Nursing Home, Woking, on Monday, after a brief illness. His father, Edwin Waterhouse, was one of the original members of The Institute of Chartered Accountants in England and Wales when it was formed in 1880, became a member of its Council in 1887 and was its President in 1892–94.

Sir Nicholas Waterhouse

Born on August 24th, 1877, Nicholas Waterhouse was educated at Winchester and New College, Oxford, in which University he took the degree of M.A. He was articled in his father's firm of Price Waterhouse & Co in 1899, was admitted as an associate of the Institute in 1903 and became a fellow in 1911. He became a partner in his firm in January 1906 and senior partner in 1945.

He was elected to membership of the Council of the Institute in 1915 and thereafter played an increasing part in its committees and other activities, becoming Vice-President in 1927–28 and President in 1928–29. He retired from membership of the Council in 1956 but continued as senior partner in his firm until his retirement from practice in 1960.

During his professional career Nicholas Waterhouse held many important personal appointments, including those of auditor of the Royal Exchange Assurance, The Orient Steam Navigation Co Ltd, The Duchy of Cornwall, and Westminster Abbey; and joint-auditor of the London, Midland & Scottish Railway, the Southern Railway and the National Provincial Bank.

He also served on many Government committees and was engaged in other public duties. In the First World War (having been rejected from military service because of an injured knee) he was Director of Costings at the War Office and later was a member of the Disposals Commission and chairman of the liquidation committee which was given responsibility for closing down the War Office contracts which were outstanding at the close of hostilities. For his public services in this period he was created K.B.E. by King George V in 1920.

In the Second World War he was a member of the Admiralty Contracts Advisory Committee and chairman of the panel of accountants which advised the Ministry of Supply.

DOUBTS ABOUT 'LITTLE NEDDIES'

THE setting up of committees for individual industries under the umbrella of the National Economic Development Council has been criticized, at least in one particular case, over the last few days. Industrialists on the Economic Development Committee for Electronics, one of the nine such committees coming under the new Department of Economic Affairs, have challenged the new set-up. The issue raised is a point of some importance. Some industrialists in the electronics industry consider that the committee set up under Neddy auspices can achieve no more than can be done with the aid of the industry's liaison with the new Ministry of Technology.

There are thus two issues involved. The first is whether the electronics industry is being overburdened with committee work. The second, and wider one, is whether this is only a particular case of confusion being created by the proliferation of new ministries and new committees.

AER LINGUS SCHOLARSHIP SCHEME

IN this picture 27-year-old Mr Michael A. Norton is being congratulated by Mr G. P. Dempsey, B.A., A.C.A., chief accountant of Aer Lingus-Irish International Airlines, on winning the company's first scholarship in chartered accountancy. Born in Dublin, Mr Norton was educated at the Patrician College, Ballyfin, and at University College, Dublin. He joined Aer Lingus in 1959.

Under the terms of the scholarship, Mr Norton will serve his articles with the company's auditors, Messrs Kennedy Crowley & Co, Chartered Accountants, of Dublin, for three years. On the completion of his articles he will return to Aer Lingus on promotion for a minimum of five years. The Aer Lingus scholarship scheme provides a unique way of qualifying as a chartered accountant and is thought to be the first of its kind in Ireland or Britain.

NEW STOCK EXCHANGE RULES

THE Council of the London Stock Exchange last week issued three new rules aimed at preventing the establishment of false market in shares. The rules are subject to confirmation by the Council on January 4th.

The first of the new rules forbids a member knowingly, or without due care, to deal in such a manner as will promote or assist in the promotion of a false market. A false market is defined by the Council as 'a market in which a movement of the price of a share is brought about or as the operation of buyers and sellers acting in collaboration with each other, calculated to create a movement of price which is not justified by assets, earnings or prospects'. A member who deals in this way will be liable to disciplinary action unless he can show that he did not

by An Industrious Accountant

CHAPTER 257

A RECENT incident in our boardroom when I suggested a certain innovation to the assembled directors, was reminiscent of one of the immortal pages in English literature. Dickens described it thus in his epic tale when little Oliver Twist, 'somewhat alarmed at his own temerity', asked the workhouse master for some more gruel:

> 'The master was a fat hearty man; but he turned very pale. He gazed in stupefied astonishment on the small rebel for some seconds, and then clung for support to the copper. The assistants were paralysed with wonder; the boys with fear . . . the master aimed a blow at Oliver's head with the ladle, pinioned him in his arms, and shrieked aloud for the beadle . . . horror was depicted on every countenance.'

On reflection, I must admit that our own saga was rather less violent than this. True, also, my suggestion was more altruistic than self-seeking. I only asked, when our deliberations had arrived at Item 13 on the agenda, 'Any other business', if we might consider, as a public relations gesture, publishing a history of our company. The reception accorded to this idea was similar in spirit, if not in action, to that experienced by Oliver. I should have been wary of that unlucky number thirteen.

The chairman made no attempt to strike me with his gavel, though his hand strayed momentarily towards it. With bulging eyes he tried to collect his thoughts. I knew whither they had strayed. There was that little jockeying for power and position some time ago . . . the junta, in modern jargon, unseating the unwary leader; and before that, a rather cut-throat feud at high level . . . perish the thought of publishing such efforts!.

The deputy-chairman broke in belligerently. (He always interrupts). 'Who on earth could cope with such a job? None of our people have the scribbling mania. We'd have to get outsiders!' The managing director pointed out coldly that our records were inadequate, what with the blitz and so forth, and seemed inclined to drop the subject. Prinny, mindful perhaps of man's inhumanity to man during a certain strike, stirred uneasily. After all, he had been trained in the 'Silent Service'.

I elaborated my hypothesis cautiously. Departmental managers could be asked to prepare short histories of their own particular sections; elder employees could chat away into dictating machines reminiscing of days gone by; pensioners could be visited by shorthand-typists. A special subcommittee would collect anecdotes and reminiscences from clients and customers. 'Accounts' would furnish statistics of triumphs, disasters, thoughts and dreams.

But the reaction seemed unhelpful; so I tried again, probing for the soft under-belly, so to speak, of acquiescence. Each of the directors might consider a personal contribution; doubtless the personnel director would have some fascinating data on social changes; at which Prinny smirked perceptibly. A special foreword from the chairman, of course, outlining the company's great services to the district, and indeed to the nation, for generations past. Photographs of outstanding personnel . . . the chairman made a deprecatory (though by no means determined) gesture . . . with illustrative personal touches, and the deputy-chairman, who had won a biggish cup in a golf tournament recently, smiled slightly.

The publicity, I urged – the unique advertising value, the enhancement of staff morale, the goodwill generated among customers and suppliers by the story of our progress onwards and upwards from the days of the little haberdashery shop with its mutton-chop-whiskered proprietor . . . then the managing director asked the devastating question.

'What will it cost?' he said. 'All this concentration of effort, this dispersal of manpower, this clerical overhead . . . can you justify it?'

I pleaded an intangible justification. Which goes to show how important it is always to be prepared with your facts and figures.

know that his dealing would promote or assist in the promotion of a false market and that he took due care to establish that his dealings would not have such an effect.

The second new rule emphasizes and draws the attention of members to the fact that under the general powers of the Council given by the deed of settlement, members may be prohibited from knowingly acting for any specified non-member or class of non-members.

The third rule requires, in future, that not only are jobbing firms to inform the Council if they decide to stop dealing in any security, but they must also give their reason. Furthermore, they will not be permitted to resume dealing without first informing the Council. The Council realize that jobbers have a natural reluctance to cause an investigation into what may be quite legitimate dealings by their fellow members. In future, therefore, whether or not jobbing firms have any reason to suspect that an investigation is necessary, they will have to notify the Council of decisions to cease dealing.

Finance and Commerce

New-comer

ONE new-comer to the half-yearly reporting circle is The Readicut Wool Co Ltd, whose chairman and managing director, Mr F. A. Newhouse, F.A.C.C.A., F.C.I.S., tells shareholders of the board's decision to issue an interim report in November each year. The annual accounting date is March 31st; the last accounts were issued on June 30th, and the half-year's figures, now published for the first time, were in shareholders' hands within five weeks.

The figures provided, reprinted here this week, are interesting in that they show the response of a company chairman who is also a member of the accountancy profession. One could ask for more – there is that little matter of turnover, for instance. But it is undoubtedly a step forward, and one step can lead to another. The great thing is to break the icy reserve that can chill relations between a company and its shareholders.

Mr Newhouse, very naturally, refers to the seasonal nature of some of the company's activities. The second half of the year always produces more profit than the first. Shareholders also must accept the half-year figures unaudited. He announces the declaration of a 6 per cent interim dividend, and says that in future the interim dividend will be approximately one-third of the previous year's total dividend. Each year the company exports a larger volume of its production and stands to gain from export incentives. At home, order books are satisfactory and he expects shareholders will be satisfied with the full-year results.

The Leaders

IN our hearing recently, the chairman of another company said, anent the recent Stock Exchange letter to company chairmen, that his company was not a 'market leader', even though it was a leader in its own trade, and therefore the board had decided to wait and see how 'the leaders' reacted to Lord Ritchie's requests before taking action on them.

He did go so far, however, as to say that the company would be issuing half-yearly figures. This company, which modestly puts itself outside the 'market leader' bracket, celebrates its one hundredth anniversary this year, publishes a consolidated balance sheet totalling £8½ million and for the year to last August earned pre-tax profits of nearly £1¼ million.

This week's second reprint does concern a 'market leader' and also a company which did not wait to be proded into issuing half-year statements. The Metal Box Co's interim report is just what Lord Ritchie ordered, before he ordered it, if the apparent contradiction may be forgiven.

Earnings and sales are immediately put into perspective and comparison is made with each of the preceding half-years and there is short but succinct comment on current half-year prospects.

American View

AN interesting article in The Lawyer recently touched on company reporting. The writer was Mr Sheldon Baskin, a member of the Illinois Bar who is at present reading for the Ph.D. at the London School of Economics. He examined company regulation in Britain and America and suggested that Britain might well be able to use a Securities and Exchange Commission to co-ordinate the work of the Stock Exchange, the Board of Trade and the Registrar of Companies.

With his knowledge of the American scene, he was able to write that American underwriters, brokers and particularly issuers themselves were far more ready, and sometimes even eager, to divulge information than were their British counterparts. It was inconceivable, for instance, that turnover figures should not be revealed in a financial statement, an attitude that in some degree was a result of the fact that disclosure of these figures had simply not produced the prejudicial effects that were predicted.

In Britain, he saw a condescending attitude towards the public, giving an inherent advantage for the 'insider'. He thought this was largely responsible for keeping the small investor out of the market in Britain where, he said, the public is supposed to regard access to information as a privilege, not a right.

Contributing towards the different attitudes in America and Britain, Mr Baskin saw geographical as well as psychological differences between the two nations. The United States was so vast and diverse as to make it necessary that laws be spelled out in some detail. In Britain, where the financial community was tightly knit, much more could be accomplished by 'moral suasion', by suggestion, and by a competent financial Press with a nation-wide circulation.

Shelving the Question

In this matter of 'moral suasion', much can be done by accountants, especially by those who have left professional practice for company office. The present generation of young accountants will never quite realize how much the standard of company reporting owes to the initiative of a member of the English Institute who went over to The Dunlop Rubber Co as financial controller – the late Mr F. R. M. de Paula, F.C.A.

Something of the inertia persuasion has to overcome is seen in statements by Lord Kilmuir, chairman of the Plessey Company, with that company's report and accounts and at the annual meeting.

Lord Kilmuir, in his statement with the accounts, drew attention to the statistical tables covering the last ten years of the company's history which this year supplement the report. 'We are also studying with great care', he says, 'the advice contained in Lord Ritchie's letter as to what additional information it is in the interests of shareholders to publish.'

And at the meeting, where he was asked about the publication of an interim statement, he replied that this was a question that was being studied carefully by the board; he would like a little more time to consider the effect on themselves and also, he added, to consider the general response.

Does it look as if Lord Kilmuir is just shelving the question? It is companies like Plessey which can influence desirable trends like this.

THE READICUT WOOL COMPANY LIMITED

To the Members.

Dear Sir/Madam,

Your Board have decided to issue an Interim Report in November of each year, and this is the first of the series.

Because of the seasonal nature of some of your Company's activities, the profits earned during the first half of each financial year are always less than those earned during the second half. In order that you may be in a better position to make a realistic appraisal of the likely trend of the profits for the current financial year the unaudited results for the six months ended 30th September, 1964 are compared below with those for the six months ended 30th September, 1963 and with the audited results for the year ended 31st March, 1964.

	Half year to 30th Sept., 1964	Half year to 30th Sept., 1963	Year to 31st March 1964
Trading Profit	308,860	215,110	732,693
Less: Depreciation	27,753	20,324	47,421
Profit from Trading	281,107	194,786	685,272
Less: Convertible Loan Stock Interest and Bank Interest	15,792	14,625	38,751
Income before Taxation	265,315	180,161	646,521
Less: Estimated Taxation	147,941	105,779	358,452
income after Estimated Taxation	117,374	74,382	288,069

On 9th October, 1964 a scrip issue of 1 for 2 was made, and taking this into account an Interim Dividend of 2¾% would be equivalent to the Interim Dividend declared on 6th December, 1963. However, in my last statement to members, details of which were included in the 1963/4 printed accounts, reference was made to the fact that your Board intended to recommend an increase in the Interim Ordinary Dividend, in order to reduce the disparity between the Interim and Final Ordinary Dividends. Your Board have now decided that in the absence of unforeseen circumstances it will in future recommend an Interim Dividend, in November each year, equivalent to approximately one-third of the total dividends paid for the preceding year: accordingly your Board today declared an Interim Dividend of 6% less income tax, on the Company's Ordinary Shares, payable on 21st December, 1964 to Ordinary Share holders on the register at the close of business on the 20th November, 1964.

Your Company exports a larger volume of its products each succeeding year, and stands to benefit from any incentives given to exporters; with regard to the home market, the order books are in a satisfactory position, and nothing has happened since the Annual General Meeting, which was held on 23rd July, 1964, to lead me to change my view I then expressed that you would be satisfied with your Company's performance during the current year.

Yours faithfully,
F. A. NEWHOUSE
Chairman

THE METAL BOX COMPANY LIMITED

The trading figures for the half-year to 30th September 1964 with those for the two previous half-years are tabled below.

Expressed in thousands	Half year to 30th September 1964	31st March 1964	30th September 1963
Sales
Home group	£43,691	£41,089	£41,143
Overseas group	18,945	17,473	15,993
	£62,636	£58,562	£57,136
Surplus on trading and income from investments
Home group	£4,070	£3,272	£3,590
Overseas group	1,867	1,771	1,524
	5,937	5,043	5,114
Gross interest on loan stocks	244	243	244
Profit before taxation	5,693	4,800	4,870
Estimated taxes on the profit of the period	2,447	1,995	2,148
Profit after taxation	3,246	2,805	2,722
Interest of minority shareholders	308	301	208
Interest of The Metal Box Company Limited	£2,938	£2,504	£2,514

The rising trend of sales has continued at home and abroad with consequently higher profits. The United Kingdom taxes on the profit of the half year to September 1964 have been calculated at 8s 3d in the £ for income tax and at 15% for profits tax.

In the second half-year, seasonal influences are again expected to produce a pattern similar to that of last year, although trading conditions at home may become more difficult. In the year to March 1965, both sales and profits at home and abroad promise to be significantly higher than those of last year.

The ordinary capital was increased in July 1964 from £28,767,371 to £35,959,214 by the 1 for 4 scrip issue.

The directors have declared an interim ordinary dividend on the increased capital of 5% less tax in respect of the year to 31st March 1965 payable on 1st January 1965 to holders registered on 27th November 1964. The interim dividend, which is at the same rate as last year but which will be paid on the higher capital, is equivalent to an increase of 1% over the interim dividend paid last year. This increase does not imply that there will be an equivalent increase in the final dividend but is designed to reduce the disparity between the interim and final dividends.

Expenditure on fixed assets during the half-year was £2,900,000 of which £1,000,000 was spent by the subsidiaries operating overseas.

CITY NOTES

THE hope that springs even in investors' breasts at each new year has brought the generally anticipated stock-market rally. The search for new year investment 'bargains' is illuminated by the rays of hope optimistically seen through the clouds of doubt which plunged the market into gloom in mid-December.

How long the rally lasts depends upon how long Budget doubts can be kept at bay and upon how well the December and January trade figures look. The technical position of the stock-market is such that small buying can have an exaggerated effect on prices.

That in itself may tend to pinch out buying. A case may be made for selected support for equities at prices ruling before the Christmas break, but an advance of a shilling or two on such levels will tend to make new buyers increasingly wary of entering a still touchy market.

Institutional policy still seems to be 'watch and wait' rather than enter the equity market in any kind of force. Institutional funds can be placed to short-term income advantage under current conditions and they are unlikely to move into equities until there is a firmer basis for such a switch.

Equity buying remains a hopeful, rather than an accurately-judged, exercise.

MOST large British shipbuilding yards are comparatively well booked for 1965, the Shipbuilding Conference's President, Mr Allan J. Marr, states in a new year review. The yards, however, will need to find many more orders during the next few months to ensure continuous employment beyond the end of the year. Many medium-sized yards may be short of work by the middle of the year unless substantial new contracts are forthcoming.

The excessive and still expanding shipyard capacity in Japan, where prices for new tonnage are well below those which Western European shipyards can offer, is still the shipbuilding industry's main problem. It will not easily be solved, but in the meantime Mr Marr considers 'it would be of real assistance if we were enabled to achieve equality with our competitors in such matters as credit facilities'.

WITH stock exchange turnover falling severely, the trend towards mergers of broking and jobbing firms is expected to be quickened this year. Already there have been some staff reductions by certain firms although this has not developed to any great degree.

Rising office costs and small turnover, however, make a combination likely to lead to further mergers, particularly between some of the smaller broking partnerships. A number of mergers are expected before the end of the stock exchange financial year.

REALIZATION of securities by Courtaulds Investments has provided Courtaulds itself with a further £25 million of cash resources. The Courtaulds Investments company was formed originally as an anti-takeover device when I.C.I. was bidding for the Courtaulds group, the impression, at the time, being that Courtaulds shareholders would in due course be given participation in the Investments company.

The sale of virtually all the company's investments and the release of cash to the parent has presumably ruled out any Courtaulds shareholder participation. But the question is raised as to whether the indirect benefit to Courtaulds shareholders through the realization is more valuable than a direct participation in Courtaulds Investments would have been.

Taxation Cases

Orchard Parks Ltd v. Pogson

(Before Mr Justice BUCKLEY)

Income tax – Sale of land – Purchase for development – Held for long period without development – Sale to local authority – Whether sale of trading stock – Income Tax Act, 1952, section 122, Schedule D, Case I.

The appellant company was incorporated in 1933 to purchase an area of land for development as a garden suburb on a commercial basis. At the time when the land was bought it was trading stock of the company. The area then purchased was 270 acres, and the price paid by the company was £40,500. Layout plans were prepared for the development of the land and it was intended that the houses erected on the plots should be sold, though the company might also sell unbuilt-on land. It was also recognized as a possibility that the company might in the future build houses to let. In 1934 the company bought another sixty acres.

In the following two years, fourteen houses were erected on a part of the land purchased in 1933. In 1936 the directors realized that there were insoluble drainage difficulties, and the scheme for creating a garden suburb was abandoned. In 1937 the company's accountants wrote to the Inspector of Taxes that the company's intention was to develop a housing estate of approximately three hundred and thirty acres.

In 1939 the company endeavoured to lease the whole of the land to the local authority reserving the right to take the front land for building purposes. The land bought in 1934 was continuously let and never built on, and in 1952 this land was leased to a tenant, power being reserved to the company to resume possession on any part, except the farm-house and the garden, which the company might from time to time require for building purposes. In 1956 outline planning permission was sought in respect of all the land, and the application forms referred to the estate as 'let temporarily pending continuance of construction' or 'temporarily let pending commencement of building work which was delayed due to the war years'.

In 1961 the whole of the land except some small portions that had been disposed of was sold to the local authority for £500,000.

It was contended on behalf of the company that, at the time when the land was sold in 1961, it had ceased to be trading stock and had become land which the company held as an investment. It was contended on behalf of the respondent that the land had not ceased to be trading stock at the date when it was sold. The Special Commissioners decided in favour of the respondent.

Held: the Special Commissioners' decision was correct.

(Before Mr Justice BUCKLEY)

Income tax – Schedule A – Cost of management – Rents collected by estate agent – Converted to own use and irrecoverable – Whether allowance available therefor – Income Tax Act, 1952, sections 82, 100, 101, 175, 425.

An estate agent was appointed to collect the rents of property, and he converted to his own use some of the rents he had collected. After his death the misappropriation was discovered, but the agent's estate was insolvent, and the amount due was irrecoverable.

It was contended on behalf of the respondent that the amount in question was allowable under section 101 of the Income Tax Act, 1952, as 'cost of management'. It was contended on behalf of the appellant that 'cost of management' had to be an item of expense incurred in providing the management of the estate, and that the sum in question was not such an item. The General Commissioners decided in favour of the respondent.

Held: the expression 'cost of management' in section 101 meant an item of cost incurred for the purpose of procuring a service or benefit relating to the management of the estate; that a loss as in the present case was not properly describable as an item of cost, as no advantage had been obtained in consequence thereof; and that therefore the amount in question was not allowable.

Hopwood v. C. N. Spencer Ltd

(Before Mr Justice BUCKLEY)

Income tax – Trade – Saw miller and timber merchant – Purchase of land and timber by directors – Price provided by company – Whether timber trading stock of company – Income Tax Act, 1952, section 122, Schedule D, Case I.

The respondent company carried on business as a saw miller and timber merchant. It sold wood roughsawn for various purposes, and it was necessary to maintain considerable reserves of timber. The company obtained its supplies of timber by buying trees in whichever way was possible; and sometimes the company bought trees and undertook to cut the timber, and sometimes it bought the land upon which the trees were standing. The directors and controlling shareholders were three brothers.

In 1951, the brothers bought 143 acres of woodland for £9,250. Besides the timber on the land there were also two cottages and a paddock. The purchase was in the name of the brothers, but the whole of the purchase price together with £293 for expenses was provided by the company.

No formal agreement was made, but it was not disputed that the company became the owner of all the timber in the wood at the price of £9,543, and there was a minute of a resolution in 1951 reflecting that fact. The woodland was bought so that the company would have a reserve of timber, and the company expected to clear the wood within seven to ten years, and the expectation was fulfilled by 1961. When the woodland was purchased the timber was ripe for clearance.

It was contended for the company that the timber in question was trading stock of its business, and that the £9,543 was properly charged as a trade expense. It was contended on behalf of the appellant that the £9,543 was capital expenditure. The Special Commissioners decided in favour of the company.

Held: the Special Commissioners' decision was correct.

(Before Mr Justice BUCKLEY)

Income tax – Racehorse owner – Leasing of racehorses – Owner receiving part of winnings – Whether these sums assessable – Income Tax Act, 1952, section 123 (Schedule D, Case VI).

The respondent, a farmer and also a racehorse breeder, was assessed in respect of the profits of those businesses. For 1957–58 and 1958–59 he was separately assessed under Case VI of Schedule D in respect of sums received by him for leasing racehorses, bred at his stud, to other persons to be raced by them. The persons who leased the horses signed a document declaring that they had done so, and that they would pay all entrances and other expenses, and would give the respondent 'half of all sums I may receive in respect of the filly winning'. This form of lease was adopted in order to meet the requirements of the rules of racing, and the documents were registered under the rules. Pursuant to the rules the respondent ceased to be the owner of the leased horses, and the lessee became the owner.

It was contended on behalf of the appellant that the payments received by the respondent were not winnings but were receipts obtained by the respondent under the leases as a result of the hiring of the horses to the lessees and that under the leases the respondent was not entitled to parts of winnings, but to a sum equal to one-half of the winnings received by the lessee. It was contended on behalf of the respondent that the sums in question were race winnings and were not assessable receipts. The General Commissioners decided in favour of the respondent.

Held: as the sums in question were not received by the respondent in consequence of his racing his own horses, and were received as the results of a business transaction, they were annual profits or gains within Case VI of Schedule D.

Bourne v. Autoschool of Motoring (Norwich) Ltd
Frazer v. Trebilcock
Coghlin v. Tobin

In the High Court of Justice (Chancery Division) – December 1st, 1964

(Before Mr Justice BUCKLEY)

Income tax – Investment allowances – Schools of motoring – Motor-cars used for teaching driving – Dual controls fitted – Whether cars of type commonly used as private vehicles – Whether for hire – Whether for carriage of public – Finance Act, 1954, section 16.

Each of the three respondents carried on a school of motoring, and claimed investment allowances in respect of the cars used for instruction purposes. In the first and third cases the cars had been adapted for that purpose by fitting plates indicating the use of the vehicles, and by fitting a second set of controls consisting of a brake and an accelerator, and in some cars a brake, clutch and an accelerator. The second set of controls could not be disconnected quickly, but could be removed by a competent mechanic in one and a half hours' to two hours' work. The cars were not used for any other purpose than that of giving instruction.

In the second case the cars were of a type commonly used as private vehicles, and they were not unsuitable to be so used. A higher fee was charged for instruction given in these cars than for instruction given in the pupil's own car.

It was contended on behalf of the appellant that the test imposed by the proviso to section 16 (3) of the Finance Act, 1954, should be applied to the cars before they were adapted; and that the installation of dual controls did not make the cars in the first and third cases unsuitable for use as private vehicles; and that, in the second case the cars were not provided wholly or mainly for hiring to the public. It was contended for the respondent in the first and third cases that it was necessary to look at the vehicles in the condition in which they were; and that the installation of dual controls made the cars unsuitable for use as private vehicles. For the second respondent it was contended that the cars were provided wholly or mainly for hire to, or for the carriage of, members of the public in the ordinary course of trade. The General Commissioners decided in favour of all three respondents.

The respondents in the second and third cases did not appear, and were not represented.

Held: (1) the General Commissioners' decisions in the first and third cases were correct, (2) their decision in the second case could not be supported.

Auditing with a Purpose

COAL BOARD INTERNAL AUDITORS' CONFERENCE

'Auditing with a purpose' was the theme of a conference of National Coal Board internal auditors held at the Board's management training centre in Newcastle from December 15th to 18th. Opened by Lord Robens, the Coal Board Chairman, the conference was attended by the thirty-nine area internal auditors (area is the main management unit of the National Coal Board with, on average, an annual turnover in excess of £20 million and employs about fourteen thousand men), the seven divisional computer centre auditors each attached to one of the Board's seven computer installations, and a number of divisional internal auditors.

The Board's chief internal auditor, Mr J. O. Davies, F.C.A., A.C.W.A., acted as conference director, assisted by the divisional chief internal auditors. The partner in charge of the National Coal Board audit, Mr E. F. Milne, C.A. of Messrs Thomson McLintock & Co, (appointed by the Minister of Power), attended for the greater part of the conference, together with the firm's Newcastle upon Tyne partner, Mr G. Reid, C.A.

Participants at the conference were members of The Institute of Chartered Accountants in England and Wales, The Institute of Chartered Accountants of Scotland, The Association of Certified and Corporate Accountants, The Institute of Municipal Treasurers and Accountants, and The Institute of Cost and Works Accountants.

An Effective Tool of Management

Opening the conference, Lord Robens said that the internal audit service was, to his mind, one of the most effective tools of management the Coal Board had for ensuring that there was strict accountability at all levels, and he personally read meticulously the major reports produced year by year. As a result he had, on more than one occasion, called for more detailed reports in various fields because he could see that matters brought to light in a particular place might equally be applicable over a very large area of the Board's activities. He could then focus departmental and management attention on such matters.

Lord Robens said that he thought that the conference should give attention to the way that use could be made of the immense amount of detailed knowledge, not shared by many people, obtained through routine internal auditing so that it could be utilized in order to carry out efficiency audits to disclose whether the Board was making the best use of its facilities and whether it was improving its administration in the light of changing circumstances to the advantage of the Board. In conclusion, Lord Robens said that the internal audit service had always had, and would continue to have, his full support.

E.D.P. and Internal Audit

Half the conference time was given to the subject of electronic data processing and the internal auditor. Ten papers of fifteen minutes' duration each were presented, including one from each of the divisional computer centre auditors. An introductory paper by Mr H. C. Booth, F.C.A., outlined the deliberations of the three-year-old working party of which he was the chairman.

Papers were given on processing equipment; general controls and documentation; program preparation and auditing; preparation and use of test input data. There were also papers on the four major E.D.P. applications and the auditing thereof, viz. wages and salaries; sales accounting; stores accounting; and suppliers accounting. The final paper of the ten was on 'The use of the computer by audit'.

A session was devoted to an address by a visiting speaker, Mr A. D. Compston, F.C.A., chief internal auditor of the North-western Electricity Board. Mr Compston outlined his experience on the application and audit of computers in his organization and answered questions put to him by participants in the conference. After three hours of discussion on questions arising from the papers, the syndicate leaders reported back to the conference giving syndicate views. The working party is to consider these views in the immediate future.

Mr S. Cuttell, A.A.C.C.A., divisional chief internal auditor, West Midlands Division, gave a paper on 'Internal audit as an aid to management'. Whilst acknowledging the relationship of internal audit with external auditors and its protective function, Mr Cuttell emphasized the objective of a live internal audit department in assisting management to achieve financial savings and thereby to increase efficiency. To do this, audits must be approached not only with the eyes of an auditor but also with the eyes of management.

Need for Flexible Audit Approach

He then covered the various fields in which internal auditors operate (wages, sales, hire and use of plant and machinery, profitability of canteens, stores, materials, hire and use of transport, contracts and invoice payments, miscellaneous income and special investigations) and outlined those areas which appeared to be vulnerable to fraud and inefficiency. Circumstances at accounting points were continually changing, and an accounting point which on the last visit was under satisfactory control, might become a vulnerable point as regards controls calling for a more flexible audit approach to meet the changed situation. He posed the question as to whether more attention should be given by the internal auditor to financial statements and statistics which were relevant to the aspect under audit with a view to the concentration of audit time on unprofitable situations.

Mr Cuttell concluded by emphasizing the use of the observant eye and the attentive ear, not only when the books and records were being examined but at all times and referring to the sine qua non of the auditor, i.e. his professional ability to audit any transaction, any time, in any place, with an effective result.

One of the tasks put to the syndicates was to make suggestions for special investigations by internal audit which would be likely to result in the achievement of financial savings.

Internal Audit and Fraud

Mr R. Adam Brown, C.A., divisional chief internal auditor, East Midlands Division, gave a paper on 'Internal audit and fraud'. Dealing first with the prevention of fraud, Mr Brown emphasized the importance of examining in detail the system of internal check that had been prescribed, followed by an exposure of the weaknesses in the system which would lead to constructive recommendations to strengthen the internal check. Audit visits should be made at irregular intervals accompanied by the element of surprise. Proceeding to the detection of fraud, Mr Brown emphasized that if a fraud had been committed it was important for it to be brought to light as soon as possible. Large frauds usually started in a small way, but when they remained undetected, the defaulter increased the size of his misappropriations until the total amount involved was considerable; even if the defaulter continued to operate on a modest scale, a small fraud continuing over a long period could become a big fraud. It was, therefore, necessary for the auditor to:

(1) approach his task with an alert and inquiring mind;
(2) appreciate the purpose for which the checks which he was directed to make were designed and how they should be carried out;
(3) keep his eyes open to see the procedures in operation, assess their merits and note any incidents appearing to be unusual;
(4) study and appraise the system of internal check;
(5) make a careful selection of the sample for audit;
(6) arrange to visit accounting points at irregular intervals and without prior warning;
(7) be thorough in his checking;
(8) never adopt the attitude that because the transaction had been certified by a particular individual it must be in order;
(9) exercise sound judgement when deciding whether or not to pursue a point further;
(10) adopt a proper attitude to the staff whose work was being audited.

In conducting an investigation of fraud, the auditor should take possession of the records, exercise care when questioning people (it was prudent always to have another person present), have in mind the recent judges rules governing evidence, and remember that subordinates might cover up for their seniors. The course of the investigation always depended upon the nature of the case.

Efficiency and Economy

Speaking at the conference dinner, Mr D. M. Clement, F.C.A., Director-General of Finance, in referring to the conference theme – Auditing with a purpose – said that the internal audit purpose must be the same as the Board's purpose, which was to ensure the production of coal efficiently and economically with profitability. Internal audit could best assist in this direction by pointing out where economies could be achieved, and by searching out the unprofitable situations, especially failure to use to the full the Board's assets. The branch would continue to be used as a training ground for accountants entering the industry. The success of internal audit in the National Coal Board rested very largely on the team spirit that existed between divisional chief internal auditors, and within divisions between area internal auditors, and within areas among audit staff.

Mr Clement concluded by emphasizing that membership of the Institute of Internal Auditors was an excellent medium for keeping in touch with developments in internal auditing throughout the world.

Closing the conference, Mr J. O. Davies, F.C.A., A.C.W.A., observed that it had been said that a man felt successful only to the degree to which he used his talents effectively. With regard to internal auditing, this could only be achieved by undertaking internal audit reviews and appraisals with a high degree of management perspective, in order that management would consider these reviews as being among the most effective tools for use in the control and administration of an organization's affairs. Internal auditors should remember that sometimes there was a great gulf between the world of paper and the world of things.

MAINLY FOR STUDENTS

INCOME TAX RELIEFS FOR NON-RESIDENTS

AN individual who is not resident in the United Kingdom is liable to income tax at the full standard rate on his income from the United Kingdom without any deduction for allowances, unless he comes within one of the categories of persons listed below. (An exception, as regards income, is that interest on 3½ per cent War Loan is never liable to tax in the hands of a non-resident.)

The categories are:

(1) a British subject; or

(2) a person who is or has been employed in the service of the Crown, or who is employed in the service of any missionary society, or, in the service of any native State under the protection of Her Majesty; or

(3) a person who is resident in the Isle of Man or the Channel Islands; or

(4) one who has previously resided within the United Kingdom and is resident abroad for the sake of his/her health or the health of a member of his/her family resident with him/her; or

(5) a widow whose late husband was in the service of the Crown.

An individual within one of these categories is entitled to the same reliefs as a resident of the United Kingdom, but the amount of income tax payable must not be less than a certain fraction of what it would have been if his income from all sources had been liable to United Kingdom tax, the fraction being:

$$\frac{\text{liable income}}{\text{total 'world' income}}$$

(For this purpose interest from 3½ per cent War Loan must be included in 'world' income although excluded from liable income.)

Illustration (1)

Mr and Mrs Smith, who are British subjects, have resided since 1955 in the United States where Mr Smith is employed in the local branch of an English company at a salary equivalent to £2,781. They have no children. Mrs Smith is entitled to an annuity of £800 gross from her late father's estate in England. She was also entitled to a legacy which she received in August 1962 and immediately invested it in £1,000 3½ per cent War Loan. Mr Smith has some shares in a United States company on which he received gross dividends equivalent to the following sterling amounts:

September 1962	130
February 1963	157
October 1963	184
March 1964	200

Mrs Smith pays an annual premium of £20 on a United Kingdom policy taken out on her husband's life in 1955 for £500.

Calculating Mr and Mrs Smith's tax liability for 1963–64 on the basis that they are entitled to the same reliefs as a resident of the United Kingdom, the computation is:

Income liable to United Kingdom income tax
Mrs Smith's annuity		800
Less: Personal allowance	320
Life assurance relief	10
		330

£170 at 7s 9d	65	17	6
Tax payable	£145	17	6

But the amount of income tax payable must not be less than that calculated on the proportionate basis, viz.:

Income liable to United Kingdom income tax:
Mrs Smith's annuity		800
Income not liable to United Kingdom income tax:
Mr Smith's salary	2,781
United States dividends (£184+£200)	384
Mrs Smith's War Loan interest	35
		3,200
Less: Earned income relief (two-ninths of £2,781)	618
Personal allowance	320
Life assurance relief	10

Income tax on £300 at reduced rates	80	0
Income tax on £2,752 at 7s 9d	1,066	8
	£1,146	8

Proportion applicable to income liable in the United Kingdom $\frac{800}{4,000}$ = £229 5 7

As this liability of £229 5s 7d is higher than £145 17s 6d, the fractional basis applies and Mr and Mrs Smith will receive a repayment of income tax as follows:

Repayment	£80	14	5

Mr and Mrs Brown, who are British subjects, reside in Malaya. They have two children aged 14 and 19. The younger child has no income, the elder child who is at university has income from £2,100 5 per cent Defence Bonds and Post Office Savings Bank interest of £17 credited for 1962, £19 credited for 1963. Mr and Mrs Brown's income during the year ended April 5th, 1964, was as follows:

Malayan pension	1,000
Wife's salary as secretary to the manager of a local rubber plantation	960
Malayan dividends	1,900
Interest on £2,000 3½ per cent War Loan	140
Taxed dividends (United Kingdom Companies)	4,100

Interest of £100 per annum, less tax, is payable on a United Kingdom loan.

(a) Apart from any limitation of allowances Mr and Mrs Brown's income tax liability for 1963–64 is as follows:

£3,075 at 7s 9d	1,191	11	3

Note: The elder child's statutory income for 1963–64 is:

5 per cent Defence Bonds interest	105
Post Office Savings Bank interest (£17−£15 exempt)	2
	£107

As the income does not exceed £115, child allowance will be given in respect of him.

$\frac{4,000}{8,000}$ thereof	£1,269	8	7

Since this amount of £1,269 8s 7d is less than that calculated under (a) there is no restriction and £1,271 11s 3d is the tax to be borne for the year. A repayment of income tax will therefore be claimed as follows:

Tax suffered on United Kingdom dividends
£4,100 at 7s 9d	1,588	15	0
Less: Tax recouped on loan interest £100 at 7s 9d	38	15	0
	1,550	0	0
Less: Tax to be borne	1,271	11	3
Repayable	£278	8	9

It should be noticed that the tax recouped on the annual payment must be deducted in the calculation of the income tax repayable. Furthermore, in the fraction $\frac{\text{liable income}}{\text{total 'world' income}}$ 'income' in each instance means income less charges. The world income is always considered on an actual year basis, never on a preceding year basis.

Income Tax Act, 1952: Section 159

Mr PATRICK JENKIN asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many claims for relief under section 159 of the Income Tax Act, 1952, were submitted in returns for the year ended April 5th, 1963; and how many such claims were allowed in whole or in part.

Mr MACDERMOT: Detailed figures are not available; but it is estimated that in 1962–63 fewer than 100,000 claims to relief under section 159, Income Tax Act, 1952, were made and allowed.

Hansard, Dec. 22nd, 1964. Written answers, col. 206.

Income Tax: Case VIII

Mr W. CLARK asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether, in view of the rule by which assessments under Case VIII are based on the previous year's income and of the hardship sometimes resulting from delay in adjusting the income to that of the current year, he will give instructions to inspectors of taxes to take account, when making the assessments, of any specific cause by reason of which the income of the current year is likely to fall short of that for the year preceding.

Mr MACDERMOT: The law provides for the amount of the assessment to be appropriately adjusted in cases where the taxpayer has ceased to possess a source of income chargeable under Case VIII. Inspectors of Taxes are ready to give sympathetic consideration to cases not covered by this provision where the payment of tax on the preceding year basis would cause hardship, but the assessment itself cannot be reduced except where the law so provides.

Hansard, Dec. 22nd, 1964. Written answers, col. 208.

Meal Vouchers

Mr CURRIE asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether, in view of reduced purchasing power of the £ sterling, he will now authorize an increase in tax exemption in respect of meal vouchers issued by employers to their full-time employees.

Mr MACDERMOT: No.

Hansard, Dec. 22nd, 1964. Written answers, col. 210.

Export Incentive Scheme

Mr TILNEY asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) whether, in view of the need to stimulate exports, he will immediately give exporting houses the details and claim forms for the export incentive scheme announced on October 26th, or state when these will be issued, thus enabling exporting houses to assess and claim the rebate due to them; (2) when exporters will receive the rebate due to them.

Mr MACDERMOT: Treasury Orders to give effect to the export rebate scheme will be made in January. The first claim period will be for goods exported between October 26th, 1964, and January 31st, 1965. A notice explaining the procedure for making claims at the end of that time will be issued during January, and claim forms will be available at local Customs and Excise Offices.

This information was included in a notice issued by H.M. Customs and Excise on December 18th, i.e. the day after the Finance (No. 2) Act, 1964, came into force.

Tax Allowances: School Fees

Mr MATHEW asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will introduce appropriate tax relief for those parents who relieve the pressure of numbers on the national educational system by sending their children to independent schools.

THE FINANCIAL SECRETARY TO THE TREASURY (Mr NIALL MACDERMOT): These parents qualify for child allowance subject to the ordinary conditions; and I cannot agree that there is sufficient ground for giving them extra tax relief.

Mr MATHEW: Will the Financial Secretary not ask his right hon. friend to look at this matter again? Would he not agree that it is in the country's interests that these parents should put the education of their children as a first charge on what are often very slender resources, and often at great sacrifice? Is not this an object which should be encouraged by the Government, and should they not be given some incentive and encouragement by way of tax relief?

Mr MACDERMOT: I should be content to accept the argument of my hon. friend the present Economic Secretary on May 30th, 1963, that this proposal would amount to a tax subsidy for independent schools for the benefit of those who choose to spend their money in this way on behalf of their children, and also the argument of my predecessor the former Financial Secretary that it would be contrary to the general rule that the income tax system of personal allowances cannot take into account in detail the various expenses that individual taxpayers incur.

Hansard, Dec. 22nd, 1964. Oral answers, col. 1034.

Burma: Company Taxation

Mr EDWARD M. TAYLOR asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what information he has on the effective percentage rates of taxation on profits levied by the Burmese Government on British companies in respect of their operations in Burma.

Mr MACDERMOT: I understand that such profits are charged to Burmese tax on the slice system at rates that rise to 99 per cent on the slice of profits exceeding 300,000 kyats (or £22,500).

Mr TAYLOR: Does the hon. and learned gentleman agree that such excessive taxation really amounts to de facto expropriation without compensation? Does he further agree that if no firm action is taken to protect British investments abroad in this way, there is a real danger that other nations will be tempted to buy their way out of their economic difficulties by seizing British assets and offering unreasonable compensation?

Mr MACDERMOT: As to the first part of that question I agree. As to the second part, the way in which we can best assist companies and persons in Burma is by improving our relations with them, which is what we are seeking to do.

Mr MAUDLING: Is the Financial Secretary further aware that the position of British companies operating in countries like Burma with a high internal tax structure would be gravely affected by corporation tax?

Mr MACDERMOT: I cannot see how they will be gravely affected if they are already paying tax at 99 per cent.

Hansard, Dec. 22nd, 1964. Oral answers, col. 1036.

Capital Gains Tax

Mr PETER MILLS asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received from the Gilt-edged Security Holders' Association regarding his capital gains tax proposals; and what answers he has sent.

Mr PRIOR asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what provision he intends to make to relieve from capital gains tax long-term holders of Government stock who are forced to sell at prices below their purchase price but above their value on Budget day, 1966.

Mr CALLAGHAN: I received from the Association of Gilt-edged Security Holders on November 19th a letter suggesting that holders of undated Government stock should be exempted from the provisions of the capital gains tax on the grounds that they should not be taxed when selling stock at a price above its 1965 Budget-day valuation but below the original purchase price. A reply was sent on December 3rd explaining that I do not propose that the charge to capital gains tax arising on a sale after next Budget-day should be on an amount greater than any gain that is realized. There will thus be no charge when there is in fact an overall loss.

OBITUARY

Sir Nicholas Waterhouse, K.B.E., M.A., F.C.A.

AN APPRECIATION

We are indebted to Sir Thomas Robson, M.B.E., M.A., F.C.A., for the following appreciation of Sir Nicholas Waterhouse whose death last Monday is announced elsewhere in this issue.

* * * *

The work of Nicholas Waterhouse for The Institute of Chartered Accountants in England and Wales, as indeed his work for his own firm, was characterized by gifts of perception, kindness, modesty and a sense of the relevant. When difficult points were under discussion he was accustomed to wait until others had made their points, sometimes with greater heat than reason, and then with unfailing charm and brevity to prick the balloon of their rhetoric with the pin of humour and common sense.

His technique in his firm was similar. He never pretended to a deep knowledge of accountancy, but members of his firm's staff who took him at his own valuation soon found themselves ashamed when his apparently simple but searching questions confronted them with their ignorance of the reply with which they ought to have been ready. His readiness to forgive was a stimulus to them to strive for better things; he had a unique capacity for evoking affection from old and young alike.

Outside his profession, Waterhouse was keen on most outdoor sports and pursuits and when at Oxford represented the university as a cross-country runner and his college at football, rowing and athletics. He was also a keen billiards player and was winner of the Earl Howe Challenge Cup at the Marlborough Club in 1927. His most absorbing indoor hobby, however, was stamp collecting. He began to collect in the eighties, but disposed of his general collection in 1914 and thereafter specialized in the nineteenth-century stamps of the U.S.A. on which in 1916 he published a book which at the time was well reviewed both in Britain and abroad. At the 1936 Philatelic Exhibition in New York he was awarded the gold medal of honour for the best collection of these stamps in the whole world outside the United States. The greater part of this collection was sold in London in 1955.

If the standard by which the leader of a profession should be judged is the view formed of him over a long period of years by those who serve or are in constant contact with him, Nicholas Waterhouse must take a high place; for he was so tested and never found wanting by successive generations of his firm's partners and staff, by his clients and by his fellow members of the Council of his Institute.

Harry D. Boyd, M.B.E., T.D., C.A.

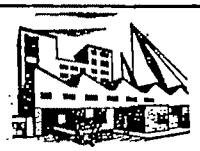
Mr Harry Duncanson Boyd, M.B.E., T.D., C.A., died on December 23rd, while on a visit to Nairobi, aged 57 years. He was a partner in Cooper Brothers & Co, Coopers & Lybrand, and Rattray Brothers, Alexander & France.

Admitted a member of the Scottish Institute in 1931, he became a partner in Rattray Brothers, Alexander & France in 1937. On the outbreak of the Second World War in 1939 he went on active service as an officer in the 5th/8th Cameronians (Scottish Rifles) T.A. He took part in the landings in Western Europe in 1944 and was awarded the M.B.E., being demobilized with the rank of Major.

He resumed his partnership in Rattray Brothers, Alexander & France in 1945 and became a partner in Cooper Brothers & Co and Coopers & Lybrand on amalgamation of the firm with Rattray Brothers, Alexander & France in 1957.

BOARD OF TRADE INVESTIGATIONS

Appointment of Inspectors



The Board of Trade have appointed Mr H. O. H. Coulson, F.C.A., and Mr R. O. C. Stable, Q.C., to act as inspectors under section 165 (b) of the Companies Act, 1948, to investigate the affairs of the following companies: Cadco Developments Ltd; Royal Victoria Sausages Ltd; Victoria Wholesale Meats Ltd.

MORE SOVEREIGNS TO BE MINTED

The Royal Mint is shortly to resume minting of gold sovereigns. As with the mintings undertaken between 1957 and 1963, the coins will bear the Queen's effigy on the obverse and St George and the Dragon on the reverse. The coins will not be issued for circulation in the United Kingdom but will augment the stocks of sovereigns in the gold reserves. They will then be released for circulation abroad for dollars or other convertible currency to those countries where an unsatisfied demand might give rise to counterfeiting.

Up to 1917, gold was coined for general circulation and sovereigns and half-sovereigns were interchangeable with the note issue until the Gold Standard Act of 1925. Apart from the new minting and those in 1957 and 1963, the number of gold coins minted since 1917 has been limited to a coinage of about 3·5 million sovereigns in 1925; a small number of five pound and two pound pieces; sovereigns and half-sovereigns issued as specimen pieces in commemoration of the accession of H.M. King George VI; and a relatively small number of sovereigns minted in 1949 and 1951–52.

The new coins will not be issued to collectors, except for a very small number for the National Coin Collections.

LONDON AND DISTRICT SOCIETY OF CHARTERED ACCOUNTANTS

Luncheon Meeting

The second luncheon meeting of the London and District Society of Chartered Accountants on the theme 'Look at a chartered accountant', will be held at the Connaught Rooms, Great Queen Street, London WC2, next Tuesday at 12.30 for 1 p.m. The guest speaker will be Sir A. Melford Stevenson, one of Her Majesty's judges, who will look at chartered accountants from the viewpoint of the law.

SW. LONDON CHARTERED ACCOUNTANTS' DISCUSSION GROUP

The next meeting of the South-west London Chartered Accountants' Discussion Group will be held at 6.45 for 7 p.m. on Monday next, January 4th, at the Kingston Hotel, Wood Street, Kingston upon Thames, when the subject will be 'The General Election and its effect on the profession', led by Mr B. C. Berkinshaw-Smith, B.A., A.C.A.

THE ACCOUNTANTS' CHRISTIAN FELLOWSHIP

The next monthly meeting for Bible reading and prayer will be held at 1 p.m. on Monday, January 4th, in the vestry of St Mary Woolnoth Church, King William Street, London EC3. The scripture for reading and thought will be John, Chapter 13, verses 34 and 35.

The object of the Fellowship is to promote fellowship among Christians preparing for and engaged in accountancy, whether in practice or otherwise, and by so doing to seek to extend the Kingdom of God.

Membership is open to all accountants and accountancy students. The Fellowship will welcome as members all those who love the Lord Jesus Christ, in sincerity and truth and who desire to give expression to their faith within the sphere of their business life.

Members are invited and encouraged to bring friends and colleagues with them to all meetings and they are asked consistently to bear in mind the work of the Fellowship in private prayer.

The Chairman of the Chapter is Mr Alan Coupland, F.C.A., Lee House, London Wall, London EC2, and the General Secretary is Mr R. J. Carter, B.COM., F.C.A., Finsbury Circus House, Blomfield Street, London EC2.

FURTHER RISE IN FIRE SERVICE COSTS

The total cost of fire services in England and Wales for 1963–64 met from general rates and rate deficiency grants rose from £33,913,313 to £36,724,411 or, in terms of costs per 1,000 population, from £727 16*s* to £782 4*s*, according to the return on Fire Service Statistics, 1963–64, issued jointly by The Institute of Municipal Treasurers and Accountants and The Society of County Treasurers.

The actual charge made to the average domestic ratepayer for providing for fire protection worked out at about 5*d* per week or 21*s* 9*d* for the year. The number of firemen employed rose from 37,852 (of which 14,625 were part-time) to 39,157 (15,144 were part-time), but this was still well below the number approved by the Home Office which was 44,089 (18,320 part-time).

Copies of the return are obtainable from The Institute of Municipal Treasurers and Accountants, 1 Buckingham Place, Westminster, London SW1, price 5*s* each.

A PLAIN MAN'S GUIDE TO THE RATES

Mr M. F. Stonefrost, A.I.M.T.A., D.P.A., Secretary of The Institute of Municipal Treasurers and Accountants, is the author of a booklet, A Plain Man's Guide to the Rates, in the 'Take Home Books' information series for industry and education issued by Newman Neame Ltd.

The booklet outlines in simple terms the main sources of local government finance, percentage expenditure on various services, and sets out, with examples, the basis for the calculation of rateable value. Rate collection through rating authorities is explained, and the subjects of objections to valuation, and exemption and relief from rates are covered. Finally the text touches on the 'fairness' of rating, and looks at the present system in relation to other taxation systems and to criticisms of the rate system.

Copies of the booklet are obtainable from the publishers, 4 Fitzroy Square, London W1, price 1*s* 6*d* post free.

ANNOTATED TAX CASES

Part 3 of Volume XLIII of the Annotated Tax Cases, edited by Mr Peter Rees, of the Inner Temple, Barrister-at-law, is published today and contains reports, with notes on the judgments of the following cases: *C.I.R. v. A FLYING START for a fast growing company in South-east London.

We require a

We are making a habit of doubling our profits every three years.

We would prefer a young recently-qualified A.C.A., C.A., or A.C.C.A., who will develop at the same rate as our profits.

We have modern premises.

We will pay a good starting salary in return for hard work.

Sex, colour and creed are irrelevant. Our pet hates are 'red-tape' and 'lay-abouts'.

Apply Box A.F. 6928, c/o Whites, 72 Fleet Street, London EC4.

ASSISTANT TO FINANCIAL DIRECTOR

required by progressive manufacturing company, located in the Home Counties and employing nearly fifteen hundred people. The company, which is a subsidiary of a large American organization, operates in three factories and several branch offices throughout the United Kingdom.

The successful candidate will be directly responsible to the Financial Director for carrying out special assignments and internal audit work throughout the company. Additionally he will be involved in the appraisal of the existing control and accounting systems.

Applicants, preferably 28–35 years of age, must be professionally qualified and possess a wide experience of financial accounting in industry. Some knowledge of computer techniques and/or standard costing would be a definite advantage.

This is a new appointment carrying senior executive status and a commencing salary of not less than £1,800 per annum plus the usual fringe benefits. The position also offers excellent career prospects to the right man.

Please write, giving full personal details, to Personnel Manager, Box AT9844.

BUILDING AND DEVELOPMENT COMPANY require full-time qualified accountant and/or cost accountant to control all accounts and costings. Salary by arrangement. – Full details to Box BA9845.

A NEW BOOK IN THE NEW
GEE'S WORLD MANAGEMENT SERIES

Management Information and Accounting

by R. WARWICK DOBSON, C.A., F.C.W.A.

A recommended book for the Certificate in Management Information, the examination for which is being held jointly by The Institute of Chartered Accountants in England and Wales and The Institute of Chartered Accountants in Ireland. Written for accountants from the point of view of managements' requirements not only for accounting information, but for information of all kinds. Dealing with many decisions both major and minor which managers of all businesses require to make, the book shows the place which accounting information – both financial and cost – occupies in the complete network of management information.

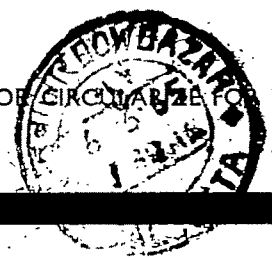
ACTIVITIES OF THE INSTITUTE

The Institute's aim is the elevation of the accountancy profession as a whole and the promotion of its efficiency and usefulness by setting up a high standard of professional and general education and compelling the observance of strict rules of conduct as a condition of membership.

The standard of the Institute's examinations, the conditions of service under articles and the conduct of members are the Council's first concern.

RECOMMENDATIONS on accounting principles and statements on auditing are issued by the Council from time to time.

REPRESENTATIONS are made by the Council, when necessary, to the Chancellor of the Exchequer and to Government departments on questions of taxation and the work of the accountancy profession.



AN APPOINTMENTS' REGISTER is maintained for members and for employers requiring the services of chartered accountants on their staff.

SUMMER COURSES AND BUSINESS SESSIONS are arranged for the benefit of members.

DISTRICT SOCIETIES, covering the whole of England and Wales, arrange numerous meetings for members.

THE MEMBERS' LIBRARY is the most complete accountant's library in existence. Members have both borrowing and reference facilities.

Techniques of Communications in Business

by C. S. Deverell, M.A., B.Sc.(Econ.), B.Com., F.C.I.S., A.M.B.I.M.

Communication has been called one of the oldest skills of a director. It generates power for any organization. 'Without ability to motivate by means of the written and spoken word or the telling number a manager cannot be successful,' wrote Peter Drucker in his book The Practice of Management. Most of us concerned in business, industry, public administration or training would therefore like to write and speak more effectively, whatever the level of our present attainment. We have to interview, write reports, attend conferences and discussion groups, speak at meetings, and get the most we can from suggestion schemes.

We are equally aware that the complexities of business today call for skill and training, if shortcomings in communication are to be removed.

There is more than one approach to the subject. The author has chosen to concentrate on the passing of information between men and women in business rather than the collection of intricate data made possible by the advances of technology.

His book will be of inestimable service to managerial and professional students, but it is more than a textbook. It is a practical guide, with all its examples drawn from business. It should also stimulate those engaged in industrial and commercial training. Its author believes that one of the most obstinate difficulties we face is that of maintaining a high level of freshness, enthusiasm and creativity. How can we make certain that the right information reaches the right people in the right form at the right time? Has the exercise of the techniques of communication been given sufficient prominence in executive training programmes? This book is above all a review and an opportunity for personal stocktaking. All managers should find something in its pages which they can profitably read.

WHAT IS CRUELTY?

The dictionary defines cruelty as 'indifference to another's pain'. The N.S.P.C.C. extend the scope of this definition to include anything that might be harmful to a child's progress, be it mental or physical. The aim of the N.S.P.C.C. is to help any child in any kind of trouble. In pursuit of this aim it will gladly help any mother or father to overcome problems that may have arisen in regard to their children. In this way, the N.S.P.C.C. renders a very valuable service to the community as a whole. And it is an entirely voluntary association of about 50,000 people who employ a comparatively small salaried staff of inspectors and others to carry out its aims. The Society is supported entirely by voluntary donations and legacies, without which it would be unable to continue its vital work. Anyone can help to prevent cruelty to children by supporting the N.S.P.C.C. with funds and with information on children who may need its help. For any further information, please contact the Director.

Accountants' Burdens in 1965

IN the genial atmosphere of a Guildhall banquet THE PRIME MINISTER announced that the Government would encourage investment as distinct from speculation. With the speed that has characterized the present administration THE CHANCELLOR OF THE EXCHEQUER proceeded immediately to create a situation in which anyone can speculate and none can invest. As though to add emphasis he has given the green light to those who seek huge tax-free gains from various forms of gambling. For the poor accountant there is one 'dead cert.' – 1965 will be a year of frustration and gross overwork.

In the United Kingdom the taxation system is carried by accountants and the Inland Revenue staff. Without either the one or the other it would collapse. They alone have real knowledge of the practical effect of the massive volume of words which successive Parliaments have laid down over a long period of years. Income tax has grown in complexity by a gradual process of adding to the statute book more and more words (often barely intelligible) to embrace this or that source of income, to close this or that loophole, to remove this or that anomaly or inequity, to deem this and that to be that and this, and so on in an endless process of refinement and extension. Similarly with the profits tax which began its life shortly before the Second World War as a very small impost with a purposeful name, national defence contribution, but soon became a post-war political counter.

One would expect that if a really major upheaval in the taxation system were thought desirable there would first be a White Paper giving reasons why the system should be changed and setting out in detail a draft scheme for a proposed new system, drawn up in close consultation with those who really understand these matters. One would also expect that the draft would be, as the Americans say, 'exposed' for comment and criticism after which a final decision could be taken on 'whether' and if so 'how' and 'when'. It is a major tragedy that nothing of the kind has been done. Where a symphony was needed the country has been given a rhapsody – and without the music.

Where does the accountant stand? He knows that there is to be a corporation tax in place of company income tax and profits tax. He knows there is to be a capital gains tax. Some very scant and general statements have been made about both, but nothing of real use to those who have to deal with the practical side. Decades of laboriously built up law and practice are to be swept away in favour of a rhapsody for which the key has been set but the music not yet written. The accountant can only speculate and wait. He could be forgiven for hoping that the leaders of his profession might prevail upon THE CHANCELLOR to show statesmanship by repenting the errors of inexperience and starting afresh on a practical course, demonstrably consistent with the needs of the economy.

Statesmanship, however, is a rare quality. It has to override personal pride, political dogma and the ever-present background of those crosses on the ballot paper. The accountant would therefore be wise to assume that he will have to face, as best he can, the practical problems which must emerge in great profusion from the hurried upheaval of the tax system. These problems will abound whether he is dealing with tax computations, with financial advice, with budgeting, with capital investment, or with his duty as auditor to say whether in his opinion the accounts show a true and fair view.

Seen through the Looking Glass (the only currently available viewpoint) it is certainly remarkable that with, say, only some three months to Budget Day no one yet knows whether the capital gains tax will involve the compilation of a 'Domesday Book' covering all assets of all persons, followed by an annual return of capital assets. It would at least be some consolation if the manpower in the profession and the Inland Revenue were conserved by exempting from the gains tax up to, say, £500 on any one transaction, with a maximum exemption of £2,000 in any tax year. This would keep outside the net a vast number of persons of modest means who try to conserve their resources by sensible investment of their hard-earned savings.

It seems inevitable that the enforced preoccupation with taxation will be a severe hindrance to the profession in achieving the urgently needed extension of its work in the sphere of management accounting. The handful of specialists who will be attracted by the Joint Diploma in Management Accounting Services are not likely to be affected. What, however, of the harassed general practitioner? It is here that there is so great a need for a widening interest of the kind which the English and Irish Institutes seek to stimulate with their Certificate in Management Information. Vigorous efforts in this direction would be consonant with the urgent needs of the economy as well as being in the best interests of clients. Yet it would be unrealistic to expect that the general practitioner will find it possible to fulfil this need and deal also with the taxation upheaval.

The profession in Eire will be grappling this year with the new Companies Act there. In the United Kingdom, the legislative programme makes company law revision and decimal currency now seem remote. The profession may perhaps breathe a sigh of relief, notwithstanding the need for the former and the importance of a decision on the latter. Even so, accountants ought to brace themselves for possible crash legislation on either or both. They should also profit from experience by being prepared for a statement of intent, with trumpets but no score.

One particular aspect of company law has recently been given the spotlight by the change of auditors of a particular company. The auditors of a holding company are required by law to express their opinion on the group accounts, whether or not they are auditors of all companies in the group. This presents problems where there are other auditors of any company or companies representing a significant part of the group. An alteration of the law to limit the responsibility of the auditors of the holding company would be fairly simple, but fundamentally the problem is professional rather than legal; how far is it proper for auditors to allow their names to appear on group accounts where they have not had the opportunity of satisfying themselves that everything underlying those accounts has been dealt with on principles and standards acceptable to them as being in conformity with their professional reputation? It is a complex problem. No doubt authoritative guidance will be forthcoming when an acceptable solution has been devised.

Authoritative guidance is indeed wanted on a wide range of important professional matters. Yet seldom has there been a greater prospect of enforced diversion from productive to unproductive tasks just when the national need is for productivity. Could the Bard perhaps have a new year message for THE CHANCELLOR? 'Tell him his pranks have been too broad to bear with.'

The Capital Gains Tax – I

CONTRIBUTED

Having considered, in the last five issues, some of the problems and implications arising from the introduction of a Corporation Tax presaged for the next Budget, our special contributor now turns his attention to the complementary matter of equal complexity and uncertainty – the proposed Capital Gains Tax.

IF so much of the Chancellor's written statement of December 8th, 1964, as relates to corporation tax is brief and uncommunicative on many points, the part relating to capital gains tax is even more so. Nothing is said about the proposed structure of the new tax, and earlier reports, said to emanate from lobby correspondents, that it would or might follow the United States pattern, find no confirmation in the statement. Another serious omission is the absence of any reference to the exemption of gilt-edged securities from the operation of the new tax. The resulting uncertainty and anxiety are inimical to a sound financial background and show a lack of appreciation of the working of the monetary machine.

Royal Commission

It is natural to ask how the new tax will be related to the existing short-term gains tax, but all the statement has to say on this score is that the matter is under examination. Will the capital gains be assessed as part of the taxpayer's total income, as at present, or will the new tax be charged at a flat rate, as advocated by the minority report of the Royal Commission on the Taxation of Profits and Income (1955, Cmd 9474) or at a variable rate as in the United States and Sweden? If the former method is adopted, will the tax run parallel with the existing gains tax and add yet another case to Schedule D, or will the old and new gains taxes be combined? It would seem that some features, at least, of the existing gains tax legislation (Finance Act, 1962, Schedule 9, paragraphs 10–14) commend themselves to the Chancellor and are going to be followed, in general, in the case of a 'conversion operation or a scheme of company reorganization'.

There seems to be a general impression abroad that the Chancellor, in the main, will follow the minority recommendations of the Royal Commission, and this view is reasonably based since the outline proposals, in several respects, follow the recommendations. These are contained in paragraph 217 of the report and read as follows:

'(1) Capital gains of individuals should be subjected to income tax, but not to surtax. Capital gains of companies should be charged to corporation profits tax.

'(2) The tax should be charged on the net realized gains of the year, after deduction of net realized losses. When net realized losses exceed net gains, the difference should be carried forward against future gains.

'(3) No distinction is to be made between short- and long-term gains. The transfer of property through inheritance or inter vivos gifts or settlements should reckon as realization, the property being valued for the purpose by the same rules as are applicable to stamp duties.

'(4) Net unabsorbed capital losses shown by an estate at probate valuation should be credited against estate duty liabilities.

'(5) Net receipts from the sale of terminable rights (after deduction of any sum that may have been paid by the recipient for the acquisition of these rights) which are now exempt from tax should be subjected to income tax in an analogous manner to capital gains.

'(6) Gains arising from the sale of owner-occupied houses, to the extent of one residence for each taxpayer, should be exempt from the capital gains tax.

'(7) For the purpose of the first introduction of the tax, assets purchased before the appointed day should, in the case of securities quoted on the stock exchange, be deemed to have been purchased at the middle price ruling on the appointed day; in the case of other assets the actual cost of acquisition should reckon as the purchase price, but the taxable gain should be reduced to that fraction of the total gain which the period between the appointed day and the date of realization bears to the total period of ownership.

'(8) For an initial period the tax should be limited to gains arising from the sale of businesses, securities of all kinds and real property, and there should be an exemption limit determined by administrative considerations.'

Comparisons

The Chancellor's statement is completely silent as to the rate of tax, but although gains will be chargeable whenever the underlying assets were acquired, it is stressed that there will be no retrospection and that the gain to be charged on disposal will not exceed the difference between the value of a particular asset on 1965 Budget day and the amount realized when it is disposed of subsequently. This contrasts with recommendation (7) above, so far as it relates to 'other assets' acquired before the 'appointed day'. The Chancellor, on the other hand, gives no indication of how assets are to be valued on Budget day, but he does say that the charge to tax on a gain realized after next Budget day will not be on an amount greater than any gain that is realized.

This could mean that there may be an 'abatement' in respect of small gains on the lines of the present 'abatement' of income for profits tax purposes where it does not exceed £12,000; but the statement that 'gains arising out of the sale of chattels will not be within the charge to tax except where the price realized from a single transaction standing alone is £1,000 or more' does not hold out very much hope for other assets in terms of amount of capital gain.

On the other hand, when the short-term gains tax made its appearance in 1962 and the periods from acquisition to disposal of three years in the case of land and buildings and of six months in the case of stocks and shares and other property were severely criticized as inadequate by the Opposition, as it then was, the Labour Party was considering a plan of its own. Under this plan there was to be a scale of reliefs from capital gains tax linked to the period during which the assets acquired and disposed of had been held by the taxpayer. Where the assets were sold within one year of acquisition there was to be no relief; after eight years only half the gain was to be liable to tax, and after forty-one years the chargeable gain was to fall to a quarter. Between these levels there was a further scale of reliefs, and land was singled out for a much lower level of relief in the earlier years.

It could be, therefore, that when the Chancellor speaks of the 'charge to tax . . . not (being) on an amount greater than any gain that is realized' he has the 1962 plan in mind. This would be in line with the Swedish plan in which the rate of tax is reduced as the number of years the assets is held increases, until it falls to a minimum. It would conflict with recommendation (3) of the minority report, but this would not be the only instance of its kind. It seems less likely that the American system will be followed, since it taxes net gains up to six months as income, and after that at a maximum flat rate of 25 per cent, with the alternative of half the taxpayer's highest rate of tax. The Labour Party has made it quite clear that it does not like the six-months' dividing line.

Chargeable Assets

Broadly speaking, the existing short-term gains tax applies to all forms of property inside and outside the United Kingdom with the exception of (i) tangible movable property generally, other than commodities dealt in on a futures market, currency, etc.; (ii) a dwelling-house (or part of a dwelling-house) which is the taxpayer's only or main residence, together with its garden or grounds up to an acre of land (or more); and (iii) buildings, factories, shops, etc., and ancillary land occupied and used solely for the purposes of a trade, profession or vocation.

The Chancellor's proposals for the new tax extend to all gains realized on the disposal of assets of whatever kind, whether tangible or intangible, with the exception of (a) the taxpayer's only or principal residence, (b) gains realized in respect of National Savings Certificates or National Development Bonds, (c) sums received on the maturity or surrender of 'normal' policies of life assurance, (d) Premium Bond prizes, football pool dividends and betting winnings, and (e) gains arising out of the sale of chattels where the price realized from a single transaction standing alone is £1,000 or more.

The inclusion of tangible movable property in the tax net would appear to involve a great deal of extra administrative work on the part of the Revenue and could lead to some odd results in the world of art. If the owner of an old master painting is offered one thousand guineas for it, and that is its value, will he politely decline the offer and invite one of 950 guineas instead? And will auctioneers at sales be extra quick with the hammer, and not extra slow, when the bidding flags short of the £1,000 mark? Again, what does 'single transaction standing alone' mean? Presumably, a sale of two companion pictures in one lot will be caught, but what of the sale of the whole of the contents of a house as a single transaction to the buyer of the property? Of course, there will be provisions to prevent avoidance of tax by creating artificial values on Budget day, and doubtless provisions directed against transactions not at arm's length. The exemption of chattels selling for less than £1,000 is seen to place some limit upon administrative inconvenience, and the whole of the proposals, so far as they relate to chattels, run counter to recommendation (8) of the minority report.

The big stick of the capital gains tax could well come down particularly hard on the owners of private companies and small businesses which may, in the fullness of time, be sold. Since balance sheets reflect the 'historic cost' of fixed assets and not always their present-day value, there is something of a rush to bring values up to date by Budget day. In appropriate cases many new issues may also come to market between now and next April if the times are not too unpropitious. And if 25 per cent of a company's shares are placed with the public, and the other conditions of section 256 of the Income Tax Act, 1952, are observed, it may be possible to kill two birds with one stone and secure immunity from income tax directions and surtax directions at the same time. But this, of course, depends on the forthcoming provisions relating to income tax directions, referred to in the Chancellor's statement relating to corporation tax.

In certain cases there is another possibility. This is to sell a proportion of the company's voting shares – which could be quite small – to a financial institution by means of an arm's length sale, so as to establish a value readily acceptable to the Inspector of Taxes. Some institutions specialize in acquiring holdings in private companies with proven records and young and vigorous management; but here again there is a preference for the larger private companies whose shares may later become ripe for market. Some companies, however, are interested in the smaller concerns, provided that they measure up to their requirements and have annual profits of not less than about £25,000.

It is not said in the Chancellor's statement what is meant by a 'normal' policy of life assurance, but it could exclude a policy which is linked to a unit trust. Section 15 (5) of the Finance Act, 1962, provides a special exemption for a short-term gain which accrues to an assurance company from the acquisition and disposal of investments in its life assurance fund which, by reason of the mutual nature of its business, do not accrue as profits of a trade. This exemption is to place mutual life companies on a parity with non-mutual companies which are charged in practice on their income from investments, less expenses, and not on their profits; but since they could be charged under Case I of Schedule D, they are not chargeable under Case VII.

The question now arises whether the life funds of assurance companies will be exempt from the new capital gains tax as, if not, holders of 'with profits' policies will suffer even though they are not taxed on 'the maturity or surrender' of their policies, while the rates for non-profit policies could conceivably be affected. In the introduction to the Chancellor's statement of December 8th, it is said that special provisions may be necessary for special types of corporations such as, for example, life assurance companies, so that their position may be regarded as hopeful.

Persons Liable

The existing short-term gains charge applies to companies and other corporate bodies, individuals and trusts in respect of disposals of property in the United Kingdom and abroad, except where the gains form part of the profits of a trade, profession or employment. Persons, including companies and trusts, who are resident and ordinarily resident in the United Kingdom are subject to the charge, but persons, including companies, who are not resident in the United Kingdom for tax purposes are not chargeable. This is broadly the position under the Chancellor's proposals, except that non-residents, whether individuals or companies, will be chargeable in respect of gains realized from assets situated in the United Kingdom and used for the purposes of a trade or business carried on in this country by a permanent establishment which they maintain here. But gains realized by non-residents from portfolio investments in the United Kingdom will be exempt from the tax, as will gains by charities and approved superannuation funds which enjoy exemption from income tax.

For the purposes of the tax, realization will include disposal by sale, long lease, exchange, forfeiture and the transfer of ownership by gift or on death. In the last two cases the asset will be treated as realized at its market value; but the first £5,000 of gains realized on death will be exempt, and any capital gains tax paid will be deductible from the amount of the estate for estate duty purposes. Death does not rank as a 'realization' for the purposes of the short-term gains tax, and its inclusion in the Chancellor's proposals extends the scope of the new tax considerably, particularly if all time limits should be abolished, or even if the 1962 'plan' materializes. The exemption of the first £5,000 of gains on death is clearly related to the £5,000 exemption limit for estate duty established by the Finance Act, 1963, and will presumably be adjusted from time to time to keep pace with any extension of the latter limit.

Waiting for the Accounts

by P. A. BIRD, B.Sc.(Econ.), A.C.A.

QUOTED companies are to be required by the Stock Exchange, and in due course are likely to be required by a new Companies Act also, to disclose more financial information at more frequent intervals. These are steps in the right direction, but the usefulness of the new regulations will be limited if no attempt is made to reduce the time-lag between the end of a financial period and the reporting of its results.

Accountants will never be able to satisfy fully the desires of most 'consumers' of financial reports; for what the latter would like is the report for the period which is just starting! But interested parties should be provided with reports for past periods very soon after the end of those periods. The greater the delay between period-end and publication of results, the less valuable is the report when it does appear, because the unknown results of the intervening period grow more interesting and important as that period extends.

Two instances of delay in publication of results have attracted considerable publicity in recent months. At the time, in mid-1964, when Rolls Razor Ltd was going into liquidation, there was much interest in the affairs of English & Overseas Investments Ltd, the other quoted company with which Mr John Bloom was concerned. But the latest available accounts at the time were those for the year ended March 31st, 1963, which were published on January 9th, 1964. Since March 31st, 1963, Mr Bloom had sold to English & Overseas Investments a block of shares in Rolls Razor Ltd previously held in his own name.

The other notable instance of delay in publishing results does not concern individual investors, but is undoubtedly of public, and maybe of political, significance. The accounts of British Overseas Airways Corporation for the year ended March 31st, 1964, were not published until November 5th – seven months after the end of the Corporation's financial year.

Sample Survey

A small sample survey has recently been carried out to examine the present interval between year-end and publication of accounts. By the rules of the Stock Exchange, quoted companies are required to issue a preliminary statement of profits at the same time as the final dividend is announced. These two are usually released on or about the date on the auditors' report, which is the date on which the auditors complete their work and approve the accounts for publication. There is then a further delay, while the report and accounts are being printed, before the full accounts are made available to the public. Each of these intervals was recorded separately for each of the companies sampled.

The list of companies used as source for the samples was that contained in the Board of Trade publication Company Assets Income and Finance in 1960, in which companies are listed in order of the book value of their net assets. Three samples were taken in order to assist in establishing whether company size influences the speed with which their accounts are produced. The top twenty-five companies in the list formed the first sample, twenty-five selected randomly from the first 200 in the list the second sample, and twenty-five selected randomly from the first 1,000 in the list the final sample. The latest accounts available in September 1964 were used for the survey, including reports on years ending between March 31st, 1963, and May 2nd, 1964.

Average Delay

The results, as shown in Table I, disclose very little difference in average interval among the three samples. Average delay between year-end and the preliminary profits report varied only between eighty-six and ninety-eight days; and the delay between preliminary reports and the publication of the full annual reports averaged twenty-one to twenty-seven days. In each sample the combined delay, that is, from year-end to the appearance of the annual report, averaged between 110 and 120 days. It was noted that in each sample the minimum delay in producing preliminary figures was recorded by a company in the retail stores business. And in each sample one or two companies made no statement until the annual report was ready, so that zero minimum delay is recorded between preliminary and full reporting.

Delay in reporting is one of the very few matters which is not discussed in the annual review of the accounts of 600 American companies published by the American Institute of Certified Public Accountants under the title Accounting Trends. But in the section on audit opinions many audit reports are quoted in full, including their date, which approximates in Britain to the date of the preliminary profit statement. In the 1963 issue, which reviews accounts for years ending in 1962, eighty-eight audit reports were quoted. Analysis of the dates of these reports, which appears in the 'U.S.A.' column of Table I, showed an average delay of 55·6 days – about one month less than the quickest of the averages of the three British samples. Most of the opinions quoted in Accounting Trends are reproduced because they contain qualifications. They constitute therefore a sample which is likely to be biased in the direction of long delay, as they are opinions arising mostly from audits in which major problems were involved.

Responsibility for delay in reporting must be shared by the company, its auditors and its printers. The auditor in the United States has a more difficult task when he tries to complete audits quickly than his British counterpart, because so many of his clients insist on ending their financial year on December 31st. About three-quarters of the eighty-eight opinions quoted in Accounting Trends 1963 were reporting on years ending on December 31st, and forty-eight of the audit opinions were dated in January or February. Yet the American auditor completes his work on average a month earlier. Both the companies' accounting and the audits themselves must be carefully organized and programmed to achieve this speedier reporting.

Improvement by Persuasion

The annual reports of American companies tend to be larger and more elaborate than those of British companies. They appear to take longer on average to be prepared and printed, so that about half of the time advantage gained by faster accounting and auditing is lost before the printed report is circulated. This is a very tentative assertion based only upon the reporting delays disclosed by a sample of one in ten of the companies (Canadian and United States) included in the cards of the North American Service of the Exchange Telegraph Co Ltd, producing the results recorded in the 'North America' column of Table I. The averages for the Canadian and U.S. companies separately were almost identical with that for the whole sample – about ninety-five days to the annual report. U.S. companies were, however, more closely grouped around the average. This average delay is about twenty days less than those of the British samples, whereas U.S. audit opinions sampled were on average about thirty-five days earlier than British preliminary reports.

In the writer's opinion, efforts to accelerate the British reporting process towards American rates of accounting and auditing, while retaining the more rapid British printing, should be actively exerted on two fronts – one persuasive and one mandatory; one directed primarily at the companies which care about their reputation with investors, and the other directed at the companies who remain reluctant to take their shareholders into their confidence.

Any business which is operating on a scale to justify a quotation for its shares should produce, for the use of its own management, accounts at least once in each quarter and within, at most, one month from the end of each quarter. If the figures are available to the company, there should be no administrative difficulty in making them available to the public with little further delay. The accounting profession should be quite clear about this itself and should then make its opinion widely known. It should not take any longer to produce year-end accounts than it does to prepare those for interim periods.

The special problems which delay annual accounts and the audit are usually problems of classification and valuation which arose earlier in the year and could have been faced and solved by the company and the auditors before the year-end; too often they are side-tracked into a 'Suspense account' whose disposition is not considered until the annual accounts are being prepared. If accountants are prepared to recognize and publicize the shortcomings of much present practice, the investing public will become aware that those companies which delay in publishing their accounts must belong to one of two groups. Either their management wishes to delay publication as long as possible for reasons which can only be guessed but could hardly enhance its reputation; or, alternatively, the company does not operate a financial reporting system capable of reporting quickly, although such a system is essential for effective management control of the business. Most companies will wish to avoid being assigned by public opinion to either of these groups.

Improvement by Regulation

Now that the Stock Exchange has 'taken the law into its own hands' in the matter of what is to be disclosed in company accounts, it is suggested that it is also the appropriate body to regulate how soon this information should be available. This is not because Stock Exchange rules are always better than the provisions and requirements of a Companies Act, but because in this instance the Stock Exchange can impose a fitting penalty. Effectively, this proposal would 'let the punishment fit the crime', although the penalty would be imposed to protect investors rather than to punish the company. For the proposal is that dealings should be automatically suspended in the shares of any company which has not published its results within a stipulated period after its year-end, and automatically resumed the day after their publication.

Provision should be made for extensions for companies in special circumstances, either regularly (maybe for groups with many overseas subsidiaries) or on a single occasion when some particular problem has arisen. It is suggested that, at present, one hundred days' grace should be allowed for publishing the preliminary statement and 120 days' grace for circulation of the full annual report. Table II shows the number of companies in the various samples referred to above which failed to publish their results within these limits.

If such rules were adopted, however, the writer does not think that they would require to be enforced very frequently. Companies would make great efforts to avoid suspension. And if the Stock Exchange imposed these time limit rules only on new quotations, as with the recent disclosure regulations, they would have more persuasive influence than enforceable power, at least at first.

The limits should apply also to interim quarterly or half-yearly accounts, though less time need be allowed as these are not audited. In addition, preliminary non-audited quarterly or half-yearly accounts for the last portion of the year should be published within this shorter limit. These would serve three purposes. First, they would speed the availability of information on this last period. Secondly, they would give the shareholders and the public an opportunity to assess the reliability of the company's interim statements; at present there is no link between the annual audited accounts and the interim unaudited statements. Thirdly, their publication would encourage the company to dispose of accounting problems before the year-end, so as to avoid major differences between preliminary and final year-end accounts.

The writer does not wish to leave the impression that he is advocating a race with a prize for the company with the fastest produced accounts. A few companies now send out their annual reports within ten working days of their year-end; there is no great advantage in this, except where a company, such as Gestetner Ltd, is demonstrating the capabilities of its own products. But the general standard of speed of reporting needs to be improved, and the excessively slow companies penalized for their failure of duty towards investors.

Why haven't you got a computer?

Complexity?
Staff?
Training?
Programming?
Space?
Machines?

Cost?

The new IBM System/360 Model 20 has the answer to all these questions for executives using punched card and manual systems, and makes their transition to computers simpler, easier and more economical than ever before.

COMPLEXITY? Simplicity is the keynote of Model 20. Whether you now have a punched card or a manual system, you'll find that procedures can be adapted with ease to Model 20. Operating the Model 20 is simple too.

STAFF? No problem. Your present staff can be trained quickly to use Model 20.

TRAINING? It's part of the service. Moreover, training takes less time than for punched card equipment.

SPACE? Model 20 occupies less space than three office desks.

PROGRAMMING? Programs can be written in less than an hour. There are powerful, easy-to-learn, easy-to-use programming systems for every automatic punched card operation.

MACHINES? Model 20 gives you, with punched card files, integrated data processing facilities until now only provided by magnetic disc and tape systems. It can do this because of a unique, new machine—the MFCM (Multi-Function Card Machine). The MFCM not only performs all the jobs done by conventional automatic punched card equipment, but also allows the simultaneous processing of multiple card files. In addition there are many other powerful input/output units. Whatever your data processing needs, Model 20 can probably meet them.

COST? Complexity, Staff, Training, Space, Programming, Machines . . . . These are the real factors of cost. Now, with Model 20, management can have the relevant facts on all aspects of the company's activities on which to base decisions. And they can have them faster and at lower cost than ever before.

Why not get in touch with your nearest IBM Office and ask for a representative experienced in your own industry to come and discuss your needs and establish the real benefits the IBM System/360 Model 20 will give you.

A Normative Approach to Budgetary Control

by Dr P. REITER, Dr Jur et Econ.(Paris), and M. J. IRELAND

BUDGETARY control is a procedure which compares actual results with expected results in order to show the variances. It compares a plan with its realization. The nature of the phenomena observed in the financial accounts lies at the basis of all kinds of budgetary control – sales, production, labour and the like.

Few economists attribute an objective character to financial accounts, because they regard them as expressing monetary results only. We know that accounting information can be impregnated with preferences and other opinions, subjective and contingent, so that management strategy may be influenced by the way in which the accountant values assets for balance sheet purposes.

A major objective of management accounting is the investigation of responsibilities, because it informs management about them. Budgetary control, as defined, cannot distinguish between the variance which is a 'normal' result and that which is imputable to defective managerial performance. That part of the variance which would be labelled in econometrics 'erratic' cannot be distinguished with any exactitude. Changes in legislation, political and social events, meteorological phenomena, market changes, changes in elements of cost, bankruptcy and other happenings, are all merged with the results of management decisions.

We are, therefore, tempted to find a 'normative' criterion entirely independent of the willpower and strategy of the managing director. Adjustment of balance sheet items on the basis of sales turnover can provide the 'normal' accounts for the past year. It will then suffice to bring together the actual and the 'normal' accounts of the past year, in order to show the positive or negative variances and thus permit objective assessment of the management. This method raises fundamental problems of budgetary control. First, it is possible to establish rational models of an accounting nature, independent of the actions of the manager. Secondly, it is possible, starting from these models, to make an objective appraisal of the results of the business, using the past year's accounts.

This article is based on a contribution to the French journal Gestion, by M. G. Maury, Lecturer in Economic Science in the University of Montpellier.

Analysis of Responsibilities

We shall distinguish the idea of hierarchic responsibility from dynamic responsibility. We shall call 'hierarchic' responsibility a deviation which results from the activity of the employee, as compared with the one ordered by his hierarchic superior. A 'dynamic' responsibility is the objective distortion created by the evolution of the company between the effective result of this activity and the 'rational' result which could be expected normally.

In order to establish the responsibility of an employee who has a certain discretion in the execution of his tasks, there must be a set directive. An economic and financial forecast can be strictly adhered to only in a planned economy where the State or other organism has the power of coercion and control over the economic and financial variables. This is not the case in an economy based on transactions of either the private or public sector.

The dynamic situation of a company is mainly affected by the variation of the general index of its activity, and particularly by its turnover. It is, therefore, possible, by applying the variation in turnover to all accountable items, to construct 'normal' accounts. It suffices for the moment if we accept that all items can be modified strictly in proportion to turnover.

In an example given by Boris Evgrafoff[1], the figures relate to a medium-sized engineering company between 1957 and 1962. (See Table A overleaf.)

Conventional ratio analysis will provide the first general indications of what has happened. Applied to the accounts as prepared, it does not permit identification of responsibilities because there is no normative reference with which to compare it.

Total	£1,000,000	£1,500,000	Total	£1,000,000	£1,500,000

We can see that the financial situation of the company deteriorated. The current ratio went down from 3·89 to 1·39; the credit ratio (trade debtors: trade creditors) from 1·25 to 0·71; the solvency ratio (total assets: total creditors) from 2·07 to 1·87. We are not able to say whether this deterioration was inevitable or not.

Meanwhile the company was more profitable in 1961, since net profit increased from 2·5 to 4 per cent and the profitability of proprietors' capital from 6·45 to 13·33 per cent. Again, the system of ratios enables us to appreciate the development of the company but not the quality of its management. This difficulty can be solved by establishing norms based on an objective criterion. Turnover up from 800 to 1,250 is an increase of 56·25 per cent and if we assume that the expansion of the business should not change its structure, an increase of 56·25 per cent might be expected for all items. In this case, we can establish the normal assets for 1961 and a comparison between the rational and actual variances has an objective significance. (See Table B.)

The 1961 assets should have been 937 as against 600 in 1957, but were actually 805. The manner in which the total variance is distributed over the different assets is interesting, negative variances being present for fixed assets, stocks and cash. There is a positive variance for the debtors.

Calculating Variances Based on Norms

The main object of this operation is to establish responsibilities by analysing the total result into parts which represent its components. In the management of a company, profits and losses may be imputable to each echelon of a complex organization. The new idea is to fix the action of $n-1$ factors in order to determine the effect of the nth factor. Consequently, by effectively blocking all the characteristic elements of management we can detach each element in turn and find out about the respective responsibility.

Egrafoff has distinguished three variables: volume, or turnover; profit margin on the volume; and expenses, or the proportion of the fixed cost to the total cost including variable costs.

We shall call R the actual net result, and Rn the normative net result. Let

V = turnover
M = profit margin
E = expenses
D = fixed costs independent of volume

The general variance is then

$$R-Rn=\Sigma E.$$

We can analyse successively:

(1) profit margin variance by blocking the actual V and D
$$Em=(V\times Mr-D)-(V\times Mrn-D);$$
(2) volume variance blocking the actual values for M and D
$$EV=(Vr\times M-D)-(Vrn\times M-D);$$
(3) cost variance by blocking the actual value for V and M
$$Ed=Dr-Drn.$$

The total variance is therefore

$$\Sigma E=Em+Ev+Ed.$$

Interpreting the Variances

Analysing the 1961 assets as shown in Table B, the variances between the actual and rational figures provide certain indications. Fixed assets were better utilized; the circulating capital flow speed increased, as we can see from the ratio Sales : Fixed Assets, which went up from 800 : 270 or 2·96 in 1957 to 1,025 : 350 or 3·57 in 1961. Stocks also show an improved flow speed (stock : stock used =

200 : 350 × 12 = 6·87 months in 1957
250 : 600 × 12 = 5 months in 1961).

On the other hand, sales debtor turnover was slower: Debtors : Sales × 12 increased from 1·5 months in 1957 to two months in 1961.

Considering the turnover increase of 56·25 per cent we can use the same projection to determine the normal or rational net profit. (See Table C.)

All factors having been blocked except volume, the actual net profit of 50 in 1961 should have been 99 – a loss of profit of 49. Although the actual accounts show an increase in net profit from 20 to 50, the normative approach shows that the actual results were only half what might have been logically expected.

The diagnosis reveals the possibility of judging the reasons for this – fixed costs up to 250 instead of 120, for example, but this may have been justified by technical considerations. The purchases also increased at an abnormal rate, but there may have been special reasons for this also.

Limits of Normative Interpretation

In the example we have used one index only, namely, turnover, which though significant may be inadequate for some companies and in some situations. Variation of turnover appears to be a complete criterion, but the inner and outer limits must be ascertained. The technical characteristics of a company can sometimes produce costs which 'normally' are not proportional to volume (Fig. 1 below):

The essential is to move the problem from the economist to the engineer. It is sufficient in each case to establish a mathematical relationship in order to define the rational evolution of the variable costs. If the problem is related to machinery the engineers can solve it.

If it is labour costs, modern techniques of time and motion should produce the necessary calculation.

The problem is the same for fixed costs, for these are never infinite; if the activity of the company is growing, the fixed costs evolve by steps. Identifying the step is necessary in order to elaborate rational models (level of production P^1 P^2 P^3 etc.).

Other features which may have to be introduced into the model include: the development of the product in the market; variation of business conditions generally of the structure of the market and of profit margins. It does, however, represent a new approach to the problem of identifying responsibilities without necessarily calling for too many calculations or too detailed methods of analysis.

THE ACCOUNTANT ANNUAL AWARDS for 1965

CLOSING DATE FOR ENTRIES

COMPANIES are reminded that they still have until January 31st to submit their reports and accounts presented at annual meetings held in 1964 for consideration for The Accountant Annual Awards to be made this year – the twelfth year of the Awards.

Entries should be addressed to the Secretary, The Accountant Annual Awards, 151 Strand, London WC2. The only condition of entry is that companies' shares are quoted on a recognized stock exchange in the United Kingdom.

Panel of Judges

The Chairman of the Panel of Judges is Mr Roy Borneman, Q.C., and the members are:

Mr Robert Adams, C.A., a member of The Institute of Chartered Accountants of Scotland and a partner in a London firm of chartered accountants.

The Hon. J. F. H. Baring, a managing director of Baring Brothers & Co Ltd.

Mr W. G. Campbell, B.A., F.C.A., a former member of the Restrictive Practices Court and of the Council of The Institute of Chartered Accountants in England and Wales.

Mr A. S. H. Dicker, M.B.E., F.C.A., a Past President of The Institute of Chartered Accountants in England and Wales.

Mr J. E. Harris, B.COM., F.A.C.C.A., a Past President and a member of the Council of The Association of Certified and Corporate Accountants, and an industrialist.

Mr J. A. Hunter, M.B.E., T.D., a member of the Council of The Stock Exchange, London, and senior partner in a firm of stockbrokers.

Mr Ian T. Morrow, C.A., F.C.W.A., a Past President and a member of the Council of The Institute of Cost and Works Accountants; also a prominent figure in industry.

Mr Hilary Scott, a partner in a London firm of solicitors and a former member of the Jenkins Committee on Company Law.

Sir Richard Yeabsley, C.B.E., F.C.A., a member of the Council of The Institute of Chartered Accountants in England and Wales; a practising accountant and a company chairman.

Mr Arthur E. Webb, Editor of The Accountant.

Presentation of the Awards

The Rt Hon. The Lord Mayor of London, Alderman Sir James Miller, D.L., J.P., LL.D., has kindly consented to present the awards at the Mansion House next May.

Weekly Notes

NEW YEAR HONOURS

THE New Year Honours List appeared after we went to press last week and we now have pleasure in congratulating those members of the profession who receive honours.

Mr H. G. D. Nosworthy, A.A.C.C.A., Auditor-General, Jamaica Government, is awarded the C.M.G., and three members receive the C.B.E.: Mr Ian W. Lawson, C.A., chairman and managing director, James Templeton & Co Ltd, of Glasgow, for services to export; Mr George R. B. MacGill, C.A., F.I.M.T.A., general manager, Cumbernauld Development Corporation, Cumbernauld, Dunbartonshire, and Mr Andrew Rintoul, B.A.(CANTAB.), C.A., partner in the firm of Grahams, Rintoul & Co, Chartered Accountants, of Glasgow, and chairman, Trustee Savings Bank Association.

The O.B.E. has been awarded to Mr D. A. Hogg, F.S.A.A., F.I.M.T.A., Borough Treasurer, Hammersmith Borough Council; Mr Albert E. Newell, F.S.A.A., F.I.M.T.A., secretary, Welsh Hospital Board, Cardiff; Mr John M. Turner, C.A., senior partner in the firm of Turner, Hutton & Patrick, Chartered Accountants, of Glasgow, and chairman, Finance Committee, Scottish Industries Exhibition, and Mr John B. P. Williamson, F.C.A., member, Agricultural Wages Board for England and Wales.

Four members receive the M.B.E.: Mr Archibald F. Alexander, F.A.C.C.A., secretary, Scottish Federation of Grocers' and Provision Merchants' Associations, Edinburgh; Mr Henry E. C. Cain, A.A.C.C.A., Accountant-General, Government of British Honduras, Belize; John C. Dawson, J.P., F.C.A., senior partner in the firm of John C. Dawson & Co, Chartered Accountants, of York, and chairman National Assistance Appeal Tribunal for the York Area, for services to the National Assistance Board, and Mr Frederick Frost, F.I.M.T.A., Borough Treasurer of Willesden and National Savings District Member for Middlesex North-west.

MORE POWER FOR THE LAW SOCIETY?

IF the Solicitors' Bill presented recently to the House of Lords as a private member's measure reaches the statute book, The Law Society will expect accountants to report on a wider range of information than they do at present when examining the records of solicitors.

Lord Tangley, formerly Sir Edwin Herbert and a Past President of The Law Society, who sponsors the Bill also advocates that the Society should have greater control in specified cases over books and money in the possession of solicitors. Under the Solicitors' Act of 1957, this is limited to 'dishonest solicitors' but the Bill seeks to include instances where, for one reason or another, undue delay in transacting trust or other business may jeopardize clients' interests. This extension of authority on the part of the Society would be applied as well to ensuring that clients of a deceased solicitor did not suffer from any neglect or wrongful act on the part of his personal representatives.

The emphasis throughout most of the Bill is on greater protection for those who enlist the services of a solicitor and its adoption would help to raise the already high standards of that respected branch of the legal profession. One wonders whether a similar measure codifying and clarifying the responsibilities of accountants would not help to unify and strengthen what is at present in some respects a much divided profession.

BRITISH MANUFACTURERS AND THE NEW TAXES

A PLEA by the National Association of British Manufacturers which is all the more powerful for its moderation, has been addressed to the Chancellor of the Exchequer for early clarification of his intentions as to the new corporation and capital gains taxes. The memorandum concludes by observing, quite rightly, that the present lack of information is creating great uncertainty and is likely seriously to discourage industry meanwhile.

It is not even clear whether the first payment of the new corporation tax will be due on January 1st, 1966, or January 1st, 1967. The memorandum urges the Chancellor to announce the initial rate of this tax (appropriate to income up to April 1966) in his Budget of April 1965, and not leave the announcement until 1966. It also asks for an assurance that unused losses and capital allowances will be available for carry-forward against corporation tax, and that cessation relief be given to those companies which commenced before but cease after the commencement of the corporation tax era. The situation as to double tax relief is in the highest degree confused. The memorandum asks that appropriate relief be given against tax deducted from dividends in cases where the corporation tax payable on overseas income is not sufficient to obtain full relief from overseas tax.

Many companies make covenanted subscriptions to charities. The Association seeks an assurance that relief will continue to be obtainable when the company ceases to be liable to income tax.

Having carefully considered all the official statements about the threatened new capital gains tax, the Association (like everyone else) is still in the dark as to whether there is to be an entirely new tax with its own rates, or whether the prevailing rates of income tax and surtax are to apply. The memorandum urges that assets on which capital allowances are granted should be excluded, like the house of an owner-occupier. If a company's asset is to be liable to capital gains tax, then the liability should be computed on the basis of a valuation of all the company's assets. In no case should there be liability where the proceeds of sale are applied in replacement.

FOTHERGALE CO LTD – I

LAST Tuesday, B.B.C.2 introduced the first instalment of its new series of eight programmes based on the management problems of an imaginary manufacturing company to which we referred in our issue of November 21st, last.

The series is devised and introduced by business economist Ronald Brech, and the opening episode was principally concerned with setting the scene for later action – although time was found in which to sack the company's chief accountant (qualifications, if any, undefined), who was said to be lacking in his approach to the business's new management accounting requirements.

Fothergale Co Ltd manufactures a new disposable plasticized paper shirt marketed under the brand name 'Castaway' and as a result of the tremendous demand finds itself in a situation where it cannot fulfil the flood of orders and is experiencing great difficulty in financing the necessary expansion programme.

To overcome this situation the company has imported a young economist-statistician, Tom Rudyard, who applies himself to analyzing its problems and defining the order in which the decisions must be made. A firm advocate of the marginal approach to costing and financial problems, he has to restrain the enthusiasm of the sales manager who argues strongly for an all-out, 'hang-the-expense' expansion of capacity. Rudyard points out that expansion has its cost and he counsels for an objective appraisal of market potential, the process cost structure, and the capital costs at the present and projected levels of output.

It will be interesting to see how he sets about his task in the forthcoming episodes of this hypothetical venture, apparently without the guiding hand and experience of a qualified accountant.

EXECUTIVE SALARIES 1964

A SURVEY carried out by Associated Industrial Consultants into executive salaries for 1964 indicates that salaries of chief accountants and cost accountants have been rising steadily. Employers 'are unlikely to be able to recruit them at less than £2,000 or £1,500 respectively as starting pay'. On the other hand the rapid increase in the salaries of company secretaries noted in A.I.C.'s survey for 1963 has stopped and the top levels have actually fallen. New appointments to this kind of position are now being made at less than £3,000 per year.

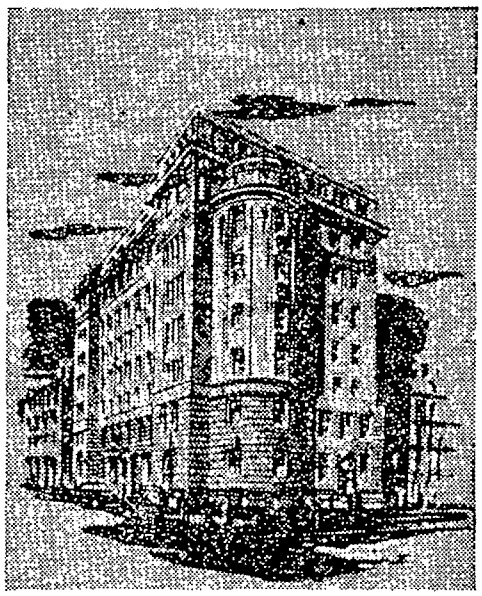
According to the fourth quarter figures published by Management Selection Group, there was an increase of 11 per cent on the preceding quarter and of 17 per cent on the fourth quarter of 1963 in the number of accountancy appointments advertised. There were 13 per cent more accountancy appointments advertised for the whole of 1964 than for 1963.

Another interesting figure published in the A.I.C. survey is the comparatively modest performance of salaries for managers of export departments. This no doubt reflects the thinking still common in many sections of industry that a major sales effort is measured by the number of sales representatives on the ground rather than by the quality of the management which supervises them. The survey indicates that the East and West Ridings of Yorkshire offer the highest salaries outside London. The North-west offers the poorest.

SETTING-UP IN SCOTLAND

THE Royal Bank of Scotland has published a booklet called Establishing a Business in Scotland, as a guide for American business men. The brochure is attractively produced with two useful maps.

It indicates the general background of information necessary and the steps which have to be taken for setting up different forms of business organization and methods of handling the financial side. There are also chapters on location and various aspects of recruitment and training of labour. The booklet points out that the Government is anxious to attract new enterprise to Scotland as to other development areas and that the price of land in Scotland is a good deal lower than in the southern half of Britain. Except in some larger towns a good site is available for less than £2,800 per acre. Information is also given on renting Government factories.



This informative booklet should be of considerable assistance to American business men who are interested in setting up in the United Kingdom. Scotland has already attracted a useful number of large American enterprises in several industries, notably to the industrial belt between the Firth and Clyde. The information is useful also for English business men, being comprehensive and informative on such matters as the difference between English and Scottish law where this is significant in setting-up new enterprises.

BALANCE OF PAYMENTS DEFICIT

THE dismal story of the deterioration in the United Kingdom balance of payments continued into the third quarter of 1964. On a seasonally adjusted basis, the current account deficit in that quarter was £127 million compared with £70 and £109 million in the first two quarters of 1964. Some slight consolation may be derived from the fact that the third quarter is usually adversely affected by seasonal factors – holidays affecting exports rather more than imports.

The balance on long term capital account for the

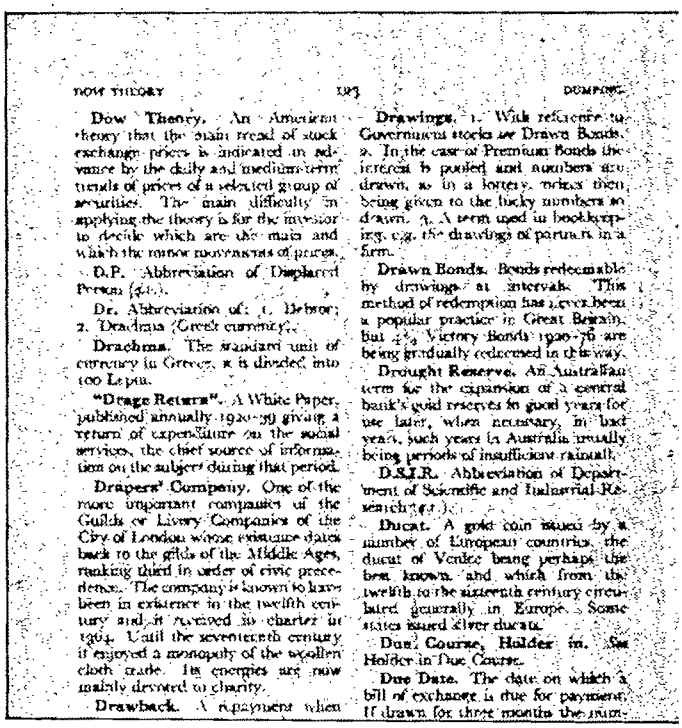
A Dictionary of Economics and Commerce

By

J. L. Hanson, M.A., M.Ed., Ph.I



Price: 35s

The Most Comprehensive Economics Dictionary ever published. Concise explanations of over 4,000 terms.

The purpose of this dictionary is to enable the reader to find, easily and expeditiously, an explanation — not merely a definition — of matters of economic interest without having to search for them in a number of text-books.

Most of the entries, of which there are over 4,000, refer to principles of economic theory and applied economics. Many items of current interest have been included, together with entries in the field of economic history, cognate aspects of social services, and explanations of relevant abbreviated words.

This dictionary will also prove of service to the general reader who has little or no knowledge of economics and yet finds himself constantly coming up against economic problems in his everyday life.

DOW THEORY 103 DRAWINGS

Dow Theory. An American theory that the main trend of stock exchange prices is indicated in advance by the daily and medium-term trends of prices of a selected group of securities. The main difficulty in applying the theory is for the investor to decide which are the main and which the minor movements of prices.

D.P. Abbreviation of: Displaced Person (q.v.).

Dr. Abbreviation of: 1. Debtor; 2. Drachma (Greek currency).

Drachma. The standard unit of currency in Greece, it is divided into 100 Lepta.

"Drage Returns". A White Paper, published annually 1920–39 giving a return of expenditure on the social services, the chief source of information on the subject during that period.

Drapers' Company. One of the more important companies of the Guilds or Livery Companies of the City of London whose existence dates back to the gilds of the Middle Ages, ranking third in order of civic precedence. The company is known to have been in existence in the twelfth century and it received its charter in 1364. Until the seventeenth century it enjoyed a monopoly of the woollen cloth trade. Its energies are now mainly devoted to charity.

A MERCHANT BANK AT WORK

Investment Management

Some things are best left to professionals and one of them is, without doubt, the management of investments. Merchant banks are qualified to give expert assistance to all concerned with pension funds, trustee funds, company investments and substantial private investment portfolios. The whole operation of investment is thus made simple and is kept under constant review, yet the employment of stockbrokers nominated by the investors is not excluded. From our daily contact with brokers on the London Stock Exchange specialising in the different markets, together with our wide knowledge of industry and commerce, we can make a balanced assessment of the merits of each particular investment. In addition, our long standing connection with foreign banks, who play an important role in the investment scene abroad, enables their first hand knowledge to be placed at the disposal of our customer.

same quarter was £100 million net which, while below the £120 million net balance recorded in the previous quarter, was nevertheless considerably higher than in recent years. The increase was due, in the main, to repayments of loans. Taking the current and long term capital accounts together, the third quarter's deficit amounted to £283 million. This compares with £187 million in the second quarter and £142 million in the first quarter of 1964. In contrast the total net balance in 1963 as a whole was only £42 million. The reserves continued to fall while the net liabilities in both sterling and non-sterling currencies rose substantially.

The Board of Trade has supplemented the regular statistics on the balance of payments with a new analysis of the sterling area balance of payments. The significance of these data lies in the fact that the overseas sterling area remains an important market for United Kingdom exports; it takes about one-third of the total. Apart from providing a substantial proportion of Britain's food and raw material supplies, the overseas sterling area is an important user of services from Britain, which strengthen the invisible payments position.

The overall picture revealed during recent years is a declining deficit in visible current account supplemented by a much larger deficit on the invisible account. The combined current deficit is offset by a surplus on capital account due to the inflow of overseas capital resources.

This is My Life . . .

by An Industrious Accountant

CHAPTER 258

IT was black dark when I awoke, this being a happy assurance that it wasn't yet getting-up time and that I needn't worry about oversleeping. I felt complacently virtuous. There had been an accounts department New Year party at the local hotel the previous evening which had continued into the small hours; there would undoubtedly be a few late-comers this morning but they wouldn't include me. In fact I'd act the shining light and arrive pointedly early, basking in self-satisfaction.

The managing director had attended the party. He likes social functions though personally he tends to be coldly stand-offish. Be friendly with all your colleagues, upper- and lower-grade, he urges; get to know them socially, discuss your problems informally over a drink, laugh away your differences. Brilliant psychology and dynamic leadership, I reflected, sitting up briskly as the alarm-clock went off.

Sitting up proved to be an error. A heavy leaden weight seemed to slide sideways behind my forehead and bump about in empty space. Turning on the light hit my dazzled eyeballs with a sort of jangling ache, and I realized that the situation was less simple than I'd anticipated . . . cold water and hot coffee were clearly necessary.

I suddenly remembered the comradely assistance of my colleague, the internal auditor, last night as we left. I was having difficulty in unlocking the car door, so he offered to help with a smile of indulgent superiority. He, in his turn, couldn't get the key in. When he finally stood back in baffled profanity I explained carefully to him that it was the wrong car he was trying to open – an indictable offence nowadays. Really his expression was very funny as he tried to insist it wasn't his fault.

I looked out of the window to assure myself that I'd brought the car home in good order, as the night had been rather foggy, and was startled to see the vehicle parked with one wheel in my wife's treasured flowerbed. My razor slipped and a bright scarlet stream ran down my chin. Trying to dry it in a hurry, in order to shift the car before the household was awake, proved difficult, two collars and a shirt paying the price of haste, so I decided to forego breakfast. Fortunately I didn't feel hungry; rather the contrary, in fact, presumably due to the late supper.

Driving in to work I suddenly recollected that my colleague, the usually imperturbable office manager, had behaved most aggressively last night, claiming that he'd been passed over for promotion two years running. That second large sherry must have gone to his unaccustomed head; he'd been most unreasonable; I'd had to pull rank to shut him up, for his own sake. Indeed, the managing director, had intervened to try to quiet him. . . . I nearly swerved across the footpath. What on earth had I said to that lofty executive to make him recoil like that?

To my horror I couldn't remember. The M.D. had interrupted with his usual suavity. . . . I'd said something to him . . . but what? Did I recall the party's sudden petrified silence? Had he misheard or misunderstood my attempt at humour? With a cold, sickish feeling in my lower regions I drove on.

The receptionist looked at me curiously, I thought, as I entered the main hall. The group going up in the lift fell suddenly, pointedly, silent. The office manager was waiting embarrassedly in the corridor; he looked green around the gills. As he tried hoarsely to speak, my personal secretary interrupted to say there was a message for me from the M.D. He wanted to see me at 10 a.m. sharp in his private office.

Office parties . . . brilliant psychology . . . there'll be a dynamic departmental executive redundant shortly, I'm afraid.

Changed Form

CHANGES have been made this year in the form of the accounts of Duple Motor Bodies Ltd. As this week's reprint shows, the now familiar columnar form of profit and loss account has been adopted with consequent improvement in clarity and emphasis. The directors' report – not included in the reprint – is brought down to the bare essentials whereas previously it included extensive repetition of profit and loss account items.

Written into the latest accounts is a revaluation of properties. The group's factories at Hendon, Loughborough and Blackpool occupy some eighteen acres excluding uncovered land and, prior to the revaluation, were recorded in the balance sheet at values arising at different times and in different ways. The board decided on a revaluation 'notwithstanding the limited significance of market values of fixed assets, not held for sale, and the speed with which such values can now change'.

Included in the report for the first time is a ten-year record which is set out below. The uneven profit progress reflects conditions in an industry – luxury coach body building – which, for one thing, is seasonal in character and which, for another, is liable to be affected by economic conditions as they are reflected in Government policy towards restriction or expansion. Anyone with a knowledge of the pattern of credit restrictions over the past ten years can pick out the credit pressure points from the Duple ten-year record.

Reporting Problem

The 'Selwyn Lloyd' pressure period is reflected in the loss incurred in 1961–62 and neither turnover nor profits have yet returned to the 1960–61 level. Although Mr H. W. Sydenham, F.C.A., the chairman, says in his statement with the accounts that turnover has not yet recovered to that level, he does not go so far as to give the figures.

The Duple directors have a problem in half-year reporting. The delivery peak is reached in the spring and early summer and consequently, as the chairman says, 'although, in the winter, the factories are busily engaged in production, and orders are being booked for later delivery, the proportion of sales completed in the first half of the financial year by the end of December, is comparatively small and affords no guide to the results of the year'.

At this time, therefore, an interim progress report has to be general in character. Mr Sydenham says that 1964–65 has started well with production, provisionally planned and begun, on a rather higher level than last year and dealers' orders a little greater than they were then. This position, coupled with measures taken to expand, modernize and strengthen the versatility of the internal organization of the group, prompts the board to expect a satisfactory current year.

Alvis

A COMPANY with a case for not giving turnover figures is Alvis Ltd, whose activities are mainly concerned with defence work and Government contracts. It is an industry, as Mr J. J. Parkes, the chairman, points out, 'which has a number of features that involve fluctuations in results occasioned by the incidence of orders at irregular intervals, long lead times and capital investments which may have to be spread and not fully recovered until near the end of a particular programme'.

The Alvis Leonides Major engines for helicopters, the Stalwart High Mobility Load Carrier, the Saracen Armoured Personnel Carrier, and the Saladin Armoured Car are a major part of the company's production. Mr Parkes says that the directors 'agree whole-heartedly with the principle of boards giving to their members the fullest and frankest picture of the affairs of the company which they own, and we do not believe in secretiveness'.

At the same time 'a board should be most careful not to make announcements which could mislead anyone'. In many companies, Mr Parkes points out, it is no doubt possible to publish interim statements which show a true and fair view at that time. In Alvis's case the directors have 'a prompt and comprehensive monthly review of events' and are 'making a study to determine what may be the best form in which to provide information of an interim nature when it can be regarded as useful to stockholders'.

Aggravating

ONE of the more aggravating interim reports seen recently was from Chamberlin & Hill Ltd, iron founders, of Walsall. The statement said that the board had met 'to examine the accounts for the six months ended September 30th'.

As a result of the meeting the board reported: 'The draft accounts for the six months ended September 30th, 1964, were considered . . . the improvement, mentioned by the chairman in his last review, has continued and the estimated profits for the six months are appreciably higher than they were for the corresponding period last year which was a time when trading was relatively depressed.' The statement added that 'General trading conditions are good and orders on the books cover the total capacity for approximately six months ahead'.

For shareholders that is good news, but in the context of the present move towards detailed half-year statements it is poor reporting. Why, with the draft accounts available, did not the board see fit to provide figures and not merely describe them? Perhaps the 'relatively depressed' comparative period dissuaded the board from issuing figures, or, more likely, it was an attitude of mind – and it is this attitude, not uncommon, which needs to be changed.

CITY NOTES

NEW year optimism appears to have wilted under the weight of bearish prognostication. Evidence of pressure on industrial profit margins, together with forecasts of a lengthy spell of 7 per cent Bank rate and of 'further measures', have combined to frighten away the shy buyers who helped to make the equity sections of the stock-market look much firmer than they really were over the turn of the year.

The better look to equities was a combination of small buying and the technical position of the market where jobbers seem still to be 'bears to a man'. The present forecast of the equity trend is for a general decline in prices to around the early December low levels, with the majority of stock-market operators still prepared to wait and see – even if waiting means staying out of the market until the spring Budget.

Stock-market turnover remains small and is, in fact, small enough to give concern both to broking and jobbing firms on the question of overheads. A run of stockbroking mergers is anticipated.

The present worry is not so much the current low level of turnover but difficulty in foreseeing any early worth-while improvement in business volume. Until sharper incentive to new investment is provided either through economic or political developments, the stock-market is likely to remain a depressed business area.

AN end-year survey by the British Insurance Association suggests that, as expected, insurance companies' underwriting results in 1964 are likely to have improved. Better experience at home has come through considerably better winter weather experience in 1964 than in 1963, a slower rate of increase in fire losses and improved motor results stemming from business selectivity and higher premiums. Overseas, where more than two-thirds of non-life business is transacted, the improvement in underwriting experience is likely to have proved at best marginal.

FORMATION of Glyn Mills Finance Company as a subsidiary of Glyn Mills & Co has been read in the City as another move in the indirect competition for deposits between the banks. Barclays Export Finance Company and Midland and International Banks are previous indications of the competition trend.

Being outside the clearing bank arrangements for common deposit rates, the new concerns can attract institutional and corporate funds on a market rate basis. Although there has been much discussion on the subject of a movement towards term deposits by the clearing banks, there has so far been no action on the matter and, to judge by current thinking, there is unlikely to be any.

Our door is open . . .

. . . to firms feeling that they could benefit from becoming members of the Thomas Tilling family which, dispersed over a wide field of industry, already comprises over one hundred firms with some 20,000 employees. Members manage their businesses in their own way but enjoy the relief and satisfaction which derive from linking with an organisation dedicated to progress. With the financial support and close co-operation of Thomas Tilling they have been able to develop more quickly and on a broader basis than if they had chosen to stay on their own. They retain their individuality and their employees.

There is room for more hand-picked companies, with top, forward-looking managements whose emphasis is on growth and expansion.

No absolute bar is placed on the nature of the business but the tendency is to seek concerns which can benefit from the knowledge and experience of existing members, or vice versa.

This announcement is principally addressed to owners of private companies, who for the reasons outlined above, or perhaps for death duty purposes, contemplate sharing their responsibilities. If you are one of those why not get in touch with us?

Taxation Cases

(Before Mr Justice BUCKLEY)

Income tax – Trade – Succession – Company acquiring another company's business – Date of commencement of trade – Finance Act, 1953, section 19.

The appellant company was incorporated on March 25th, 1953, and its memorandum of association was subscribed as to five shares by the sole director and controlling shareholder of a company which had previously carried on the business, and by another person as to five shares. These shares had not been allotted. No other shares were allotted till May 13th, 1953, when 1,000 shares were allotted and issued to Barclays Bank Ltd. The beneficial interest in these shares was in a charitable trust, of which the person, who was the sole director and controlling shareholder of the previous company, was managing trustee.

It was intended that the transfer of the business to the appellant company should take place on March 31st, 1953. That day was a Tuesday, and the Friday of that week, April 3rd, was Good Friday. On April 1st and 2nd, the works were closed for stocktaking, and they remained closed until after the Easter holiday. On April 2nd, the employees were paid by cheques drawn on the previous company's bank account, and these sums were included in that company's accounts. There was no vending agreement, no document assigning any assets and no formalities of any kind relating to the transfer of the business. Orders given to the previous company, and received after April 1st, were carried out by the appellant company. Goods were dispatched by road by the previous company up to April 17th, and cheques were drawn on that company's bank account up to April 15th. The first cheque drawn on the appellant company's bank account was on April 16th. There was correspondence with the Inland Revenue and with other persons based upon the view that the previous company had ceased to trade on March 31st, and there were minutes in the minute books of both companies referring to the sale of the physical assets of the business on March 31st.

It was contended for the appellant company that the intention that the transfer of the business should take place on March 31st, 1953, was immaterial; that it was necessary to discover what the actual date was; and that there was a hiatus between trading activities of the two companies. It was contended on behalf of the respondent that there was no hiatus, and that the appellant company took over the business on either March 31st or April 1st. The General Commissioners decided in favour of the respondent.

Held: the General Commissioners' decision was correct.

Cyril Lord Ltd v. C.I.R.

(Before Lord Justice BLACK and Lord Justice CURRAN)

Excess profits levy – Value of trading stock – Stock written down at end of previous accounting period – Increase of value in next accounting period – Whether profit of that period to be calculated on cost or written-down value – Whether income tax calculation to be followed – Finance Act, 1937, section 20 (1), Schedule 4 – Finance Act, 1952, section 45 (1), Schedule 9.

The appellant company carried on business as a textile manufacturer and merchant. During 1951 there was a slump in its trade, and the trading stock was written down in the company's accounts at December 31st, 1951, from its cost price, £543,530, to its then market value, £103, 487. The assessments to income tax and profits tax based on the accounts for the period to December 31st, 1951, and subsequent periods were computed on the written-down value at December 31st, 1951. During 1952 the company's trade improved greatly, and it sold a large part of its trading stock at more than the written-down value. The written-down value of the stock sold in the chargeable accounting periods ended on December 31st, 1952, and November 30th, 1953, was £50,583 and the cost was £456,344. In accounts for those periods for income tax and profits tax purposes the profit was calculated by taking the difference between the written-down value of the stock sold and the sale price.

The company appealed against assessments to excess profits levy for the chargeable accounting periods ended December 31st, 1952, and November 30th, 1953, and contended that it was entitled, in computing its profits for those chargeable accounting periods, to commence with the stock at cost price. It was contended for the respondents that the stock should be brought in at the written-down value that had been adopted for income tax. The Additional Recorder of Belfast decided in favour of the respondents.

Held (affirming the decision of McVeigh, J.): that the Additional Recorder's decision was correct.

(Before Mr Justice BUCKLEY)

Income tax – Penalties – Fraudulent account submitted by deceased taxpayer – Proceedings against his executrix – Mitigation of penalties – Executrix also sole beneficiary – Whether penalties still excessive – Finance Act, 1960, sections 44, 46, 48, 56, Rules of Supreme Court, Order 127.

Proceedings for penalties were instituted by the Inland Revenue against the appellant in respect of fraudulent accounts submitted by her deceased husband to the Inland Revenue for accounting periods ended March 31st, 1952, to March 31st, 1958. The deceased died in 1960, and the appellant was the sole executrix and sole beneficiary. The proceedings came before the General Commissioners, and it was admitted that the deceased had been fraudulent as alleged, and that penalties up to £21,465 16*s* could be levied subject to certain mitigating circumstances. If the case had come before the General Commissioners in the deceased's lifetime, they would have awarded the full penalties. The appellant, of middle age, had one child, a grown up daughter. The business had been sold to a company, and the appellant had been appointed a director thereof for a minimum term of seven years at a salary of £1,200 a year. She had received £500 premium bonds and 2,000 units of savings certificates from the deceased during his lifetime, and she was entitled to £5,810 under a policy taken out by the deceased. The appellant was in no way a party to the deceased's conduct in question, and she had done her best to co-operate in ascertaining the true position. Having regard to all the circumstances the General Commissioners imposed a penalty of £6,000. The appellant appealed to the High Court.

Held: the penalty of £6,000 was not unreasonable.

Accounting Heresy

SIR, – Had I in my reply (December 19th issue) to his letter (November 28th issue) misrepresented Mr K. J. Newing I would indeed be the first to apologize, but I have in fact done no more than express what I believe to be the inevitable interpretation of his comments.

Whilst I have no wish to quibble over words, I do believe that Mr Newing, for whose interest I am sincerely grateful, has overlooked the main points of my article:

(i) that there are serious deficiencies in statutory and cost accounting which need to be rectified;
(ii) that existing conventions need a complete re-examination by the professional bodies on a co-ordinated basis;
(iii) that we should test the validity of accounting conventions by cause and effect;
(iv) that whereas there is a ready acceptance of taxation as an inherent cause of our adopting many of the existing conventions, there is too little recognition of the serious effects on reporting to shareholders and management;
(v) that as a profession we still persist in ignoring inflation and dealing with this in accounting terms;
(vi) that until we do deal with these matters in accounting terms we must hold ourselves responsible for the effects, including resistance by Government and Revenue authorities to the recognition of these factors, to management and the investing public for the lack of accounting truth.

I have no illusions of the difficulties in dealing with the problems I propound, particularly having regard to the period of gestation necessary before even quoted public companies would be in a position to comply with updated accounting conventions. However, I am equally convinced of the ability of the accounting profession, given the necessary leadership, to cope with these problems, however difficult.

If there is one thing for which we have to thank the new Chancellor of the Exchequer, it is that as a result of his proposals on gains tax and with the eminent support of Lord Ritchie, there is a desperate rush to revalue fixed assets and investments and thus to recognize inflation. Oh, what an indictment of the accounting profession and our precious conventions!

To 'A. W.' I must express my thanks for responding so gallantly (December 19th issue). I had begun to wonder whether I was preaching to the converted or to the dead. Whilst grateful for 'A. W.'s' generous support for my general theme, he favours Mr Newing's interpretation of the illustration I gave of the effect of the Government profit formula, in respect of which Mr Newing accuses me of the misleading use of figures, which I most emphatically do deny.

I may, I trust, be forgiven for using the word 'interest' in a general sense as representing the reward of capital employed in the business. It was not intended in the first place to be comparable with capital invested in a 6 per cent security, but rather an indication of what would in general be paid out in dividends and/or interest in the average public company, depending upon its gearing. If Mr Newing and

'A. W.' will examine published statistics, they will agree that a live and expanding company will need to make payments of this order if it is to raise money from time to time to finance its expansion. Indeed, if the 'plough back' were even as high as Mr Newing and 'A. W.' suggest, and with which I disagree, the rate of 'interest' would need to be higher than 6 per cent.

Mr Newing rapidly backs away when I challenge him whether he would advise his clients to accept 1·92 per cent before income tax as a fair reward for capital. This he says is theoretical. Being so, I cannot see why it is confidential, nor do I believe that it would be a breach of professional ethics if he gave me a straight answer to a simple question! Nevertheless, if Mr Newing will not answer me, let me answer him by drawing his attention to an article by A. J. Merrett and Allen Sykes in the District Bank Review (December 1963), in which the writers compared the 'achieved net-of-tax rates of return' of equities and gilt-edged (based on 2½ per cent Consols) in money terms and real terms. Over the period 1939–63 the return on Consols in real terms is given as a negative of 3·8 per cent. Need I say more?

Finally, I was comforted by the information given by Mr Newing that the Institute of Chartered Accountants had set up a comparatively new committee to deal with some of the matters of which I complain. Inquiries at the Institute have so far failed to confirm the setting up of such a committee. I'd be delighted if this were so, but perhaps Mr Newing could give more specific information on this point.

Yours faithfully,
UNREPENTANT HERETIC.

Facts and Figures

SIR, – As an accountant in the building industry it is my experience that Mr Ian McGlashan's remarks (December 19th issue) that 'Contractors undoubtedly receive architects' certificates throughout contracts which are presumably based on selling price' is perfectly true.

The majority of building contracts with which I am familiar are prepared in accordance with the terms of the Royal Institute of British Architects' standard articles of agreement and it is usual to find that one of the terms therein is that a regular (often monthly) architect's certificate is issued to the contractor. This certificate is based on a valuation carried out by a professional quantity surveyor who is appointed by the building owner. In most cases the contractor's quantity surveyor is present on the site at the time of the valuation. The basis of the valuation is the amount of work executed priced at the rates scheduled in the bills of quantities, i.e. the document upon which the contractor has arrived at his tender figure.

I am in complete agreement with Mr McGlashan in that it is preferable for the valuation of work in progress to be based on the architect's certificate (less any provisions for maintenance work and contingencies) rather than on a pure book-figure of 'cost' (irrespective of whether or not an arbitrary figure has been added for 'oncost'). The reason why I hold this view is that the valuation is prepared by a highly-trained building cost expert (i.e. the quantity surveyor).

Regarding the point raised concerning the showing of a minus figure for net work in progress, this can frequently happen as the simple example below shows:

(1) Contract No. 1 – labour, materials and direct expenses	180,000
(2) Contract No. 1 – gross valuations to the same date including retentions ..	£200,000
(3) Balance sheet entries:
Current liabilities
Gross work certified in excess of cost	20,000
Current assets
Work in progress at cost	180,000
Work certified including retention ..	200,000
Difference as contra	£20,000

In connection with costing and management accounting problems peculiar to the contracting industry, textbooks and articles in professional journals have very little to offer. One becomes a little tired of finding introductions such as 'Assume that Factory A produces two products X and Y, etc.'

Yours faithfully,
ANOTHER HERETIC.

Product Costing

SIR, – In his letter on my 'quiz' in your issue of November 7th, Mr Owler (December 26th issue), makes a valid debating point; but if one accepts this, then the concept that stock values may include that portion of all the factors effectively applied in production to the point of completion as being representative of a conservative valuation of ultimate realizable value on a continuing basis, must, in turn, be completely abandoned. One must look at and consider not only monthly profits but asset values and also how such figures are viewed annually by all interested parties. (In his example Mr Owler would substitute at one period a stock value of £30,000 for a value of £32,000 placed on stocks which are invoiced in the next period at £50,000 as presenting a fair and reasonable picture.)

It is felt that, with one eye on long-term product pricing, in multi-product firms with diverse products calling on different resources, a very strong case can be made for calculating not only marginal cost, but all-in product costs. Significantly, it was not stated that this automatically led to a complete double-entry total absorption costing and accounting system, for in suitable cases (perhaps confectionery but not Cunarders) one may fairly and reasonably (rather than correctly or incorrectly) avoid 'absorbing' fixed overheads through the system without arriving at misleading asset values and asset comparisons.

Yours faithfully,
YOUR CONTRIBUTOR.

Typing Listing Cards

IBM have introduced a card-holding platen which will fit Executive or Standard C electric typewriters. The object is to enable index cards to have single lines typed on them for such purposes as photographic copying of lines for telephone lists, voters' lists, parts lists, book lists, etc. Thus the cards can be stored and amended as required. Whenever a reprint is required, a photographic listing of the single line will produce a composite negative for platemaking.

The card-holding platen is basically a normal platen with a slot along it; into this slot the base of the card is placed. The cost of this platen is £5.

Apart from this card-holding platen, two other versions are available – a card-positioning platen and a visible-index card holder. The former costs £25 and is designed to hold cards (such as punched-cards or index cards) firmly down to the very last line. The visible-card index holder for typing strip indexes etc. is rather more elaborate and comes as a built-in unit on any IBM Executive or Standard C electric typewriter; as such, this platen adds £75 to the basic cost of the machine.

Coping with Volume Orders

THE ENM 300-Channel Data Analyser recently installed at Wheatcroft Bros, Nottingham, provides a continuous display of the stock-for-sale position of over two hundred and fifty different varieties of rose trees. Wheatcroft have an annual sale of over one million trees. Rapid analysis of order intake and an up-to-the-minute stock position are the two primary requirements fulfilled by this data analyser.

The machine consists of 300 electrical-impulse counters, each counter linked to its own press-button on a keyboard. Each counter, or register, represents one variety of rose. The maximum quantity that can be held by any register is 999,999. Each register can accept either additions or subtractions.

In order to show the stock position, Wheatcroft Bros first had their entire stock entered on the registers using the machine with its controls set for addition.

With this ENM 300-Channel Data Analyser one operator handles the order analysis and stock control of rose trees at Wheatcroft Bros in less than half the time of the previous system.

The machine, which is the largest installed in this country, requires one operator only and she can be taught how to operate the machine in half a day.

Before this machine was installed, many calculations and many sheets of paper were used in an attempt to assess the stock position. In the peak ordering period, from late summer to early autumn, overtime and week-end work was necessary to analyse the incoming orders. Now, however, with this unit, one operator can handle the orders as fast as they come in. There is no pile-up, no overtime, and the stock position is up to date all the time. The estimated saving is over 50 per cent.

Copying Accounts

A NEW transfer copier from Remington is the Model 236. This consists of a flatbed exposure unit mounted behind a rotary developer section for the production of copies up to 13 by 16 in. The machine is ready for use by the movement of one lever which switches the machine on and expels developer to a developer trough. A return movement of the same lever drains the trough (the fluid returns to a plastic container) and switches off the current. This brief-size copier weighs 51lb. and measures 29 by 25 by 10½ in.

Price: £99 10s.

For Critical Path Investigations

NEW visual aids for Critical Path Method investigations have been added to the range of Movigraph planning units produced by Adapta-Charts Ltd. Marketed as standardized kits, known as Pert-Paks, these kits meet the need for an effective means of preparing Pert/Cpm diagrams without the costs and delays of ordinary drafting methods. All the essential elements of a project, their request and interrelationships can be clearly plotted and the inevitable changes made quickly and easily as and when the need arises.

Each Pert-Pak kit consists of a basic wall-mounted planning board pierced at ¼ in. intervals over its entire surface. This high perforation-density (more than two thousand holes per sq. ft) permits great flexibility in positioning the information to be displayed, as well as enabling the link-lines between events to be of any desired length and direction. The link-lines, representing activities to be carried out, are formed from coloured nylon elastic cords and are simply pegged and stretched between the events. Other necessary items in the kit include peg-in title frames (describing activities), event pins and numbers, time-interval markers, self-adhesive numbers, etc.

Price: From £21 to £54.

Equipment

Finding the Filed Facts

THE demand of commerce for more information quickly led to the installation of punched-card installations in larger companies. But smaller concerns were not able to maintain such readily accessible stores of information.

However, edge-punched cards, as opposed to cards with information punched on their body, have for some time offered a similar facility to smaller businesses. The edges of cards are punched or notched to correspond to a predetermined information code. A needle is pushed through the appropriately selected holes and the cards drop away from the needles, thereby leaving the selected cards offset.

Kalamazoo Factfinder

The Kalamazoo Factfinder now goes a stage further than this. It consists of:

(a) a base housing a small electric motor for vibratory purposes;

(b) a platform spring-mounted on the base. Spaced at small intervals are channels into which programme bars are inserted and firmly held in the centre of the platform;

(c) programme bars which slide into platform channels that denote the desired characteristics. Any card punched in a specific position will drop down over a specific bar and the other cards unpunched in this position will rest on top of the bar. When more than one programme bar is used, those cards that are punched only in all the corresponding positions drop over the bar.

Many types of combinations and codes can be applied to produce the required information. High accuracy and speed are claimed. For example, conventional types of edge-punched cards usually select one item of information at a time. With Factfinder, by positioning a programme bar for each item, the selections can be achieved in one operation. For example, the data cards of 5,000 employees could be sorted to disclose all males, over 21, unmarried, and who have accountancy qualifications, in as little as five minutes.

The Factfinder is available in three sizes, working with cards measuring 3¼ by 7⅜, 7⅜ by 7⅜ and 8¼ by 10⅜ in. and at present is being used for applications such as production records, student records, monitoring production and engineering activity, sales promotion records and accident analyses.

Price: according to requirements, between £150–£250.

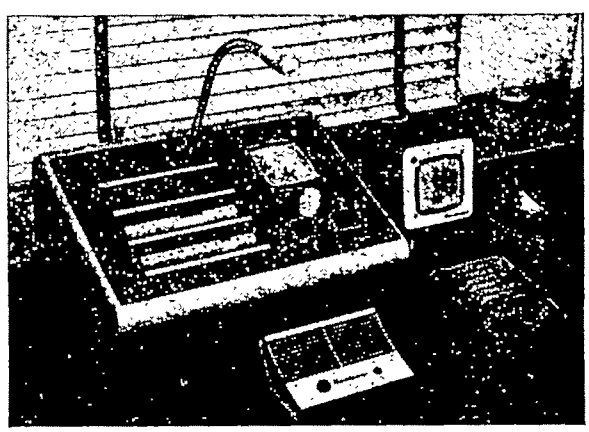
Calling 120 Substations

THE new Centrum transistorized control unit is of interest to organizations that have a need for two-way communication where it is unnecessary for the substations themselves to intercommunicate.



The basic equipment consists of a master station capable of controlling from twenty to 120 substations. Operation is simplicity itself. When a substation calls, the appropriate button on the master lights up; simultaneously an audible signal is received. The controller depresses the illuminated button; holds down the green talk/listen button and answers, releasing the green button to hear the reply. If a second substation calls whilst the controller is talking, the visual signal only is received, and stays on until dealt with. If three, four or more calls are received simultaneously they must be dealt with in rotation before the visual signals go off. Thus no calls can be forgotten.

Several masters can be incorporated if required, sited at different locations with full intercommunicating facilities between them; substations can be wired to call one or more of the masters, as required. A controller can call several 'subs' at the same time by depressing call buttons simultaneously.

If it is desirable that a controller should be able to call all stations, this can be catered for by the inclusion of an additional amplifier, which steps up the power when needed. Staff location is thereby a built-in feature. Several kinds of substation are available, for office, workshop, outdoor sites, etc., and they can be equipped with noise-reducing microphones.

Price: Master Station £314–£754. Speakers and installation extra.

Bradford Cadmus

The death occurred on December 28th, 1964, at his home in Winconsin, Connecticut, U.S.A., of Mr Bradford Cadmus who was the first Managing Director of the Institute of Internal Auditors, a post he held for fifteen years from 1947 to 1962 when he retired from that position to become the Institute's Director of Research and Education.

Born in Elyria, Ohio, Mr Cadmus graduated B.A. at Columbia University in 1923, after which he served for a short time on the staff of the New York Stock Exchange. He began his internal auditing experience with Western Electric Co; from there he went to Royal Baking Powder Co and then to Standard Brands Incorporated where he was in charge of internal auditing, systems and procedures. He joined the Institute of Internal Auditors in 1942, six months after its formation.

During the fifteen years he was managing director, Mr Cadmus worked on a number of research projects. During this period he was co-editor, with Victor Z. Brink, of Internal Auditing in Industry and co-author, with A. J. E. Child, of Internal Control against Fraud and Waste. Just before his death he completed a book on Operational Auditing – a practical guide book for executives, operating managers, educationists, accountants and auditors.

He has written extensively – several of his articles have appeared in The Accountant – and has talked on internal auditing to all Chapters of the Institute of Internal Auditors and other organizations in many countries. He visited the United Kingdom in 1959, touring and addressing all the United Kingdom Chapters of the Institute; he also attended the Institute's Third European Regional Conference at Brighton in 1962, subsequently again visiting all the United Kingdom Chapters.

SOUTHEND CHARTERED ACCOUNTANTS' ANNUAL DINNER

The annual dinner of the Southend-on-Sea Chartered Accountants' Group held on December 15th was attended by 150 members and guests, the latter representing all the local professions and the business life of the town.

Mr E. H. Davison, F.C.A., a member of the Council of The Institute of Chartered Accountants in England and Wales, proposed the toast of 'The Group' and posed a few of the problems facing the accountancy profession in the changing world. Is the profession, he asked, to be a small select body of the very highest standard, involving nothing less than two 'A' levels as qualification into articles, or is it to be a large body of perhaps a quarter of a million members?

Addressing the younger members of the Group, Mr Davison said that in their hands lay the future of the profession and added: 'Make your presence felt; let your elders know there is a young, vital element in the profession.'

The Chairman of the Group, Mr M. A. Wren, F.C.A., who presided at the dinner, responded to the toast. Mr B. S. Coker, F.C.A., proposed the toast of 'The Guests' and Mr A. O. Kelton, F.V.I., a director of the Hammerson Group of Companies, which is responsible for the forthcoming re-development of the centre of Southend, responded.

CITY DISCUSSION GROUP

The next meeting of the City Discussion Group of Chartered Accountants will be held on Wednesday, January 13th, at the White Swan, Coleman Street, London EC2, at 6 for 6.30 p.m. The subject for discussion will be 'Corporation tax and capital gains tax'. Mr A. R. English, F.C.A., will lead the discussion.

LONDON CHARTERED ACCOUNTANT STUDENTS' INTRODUCTORY COURSES

During the autumn The Chartered Accountant Students' Society of London organized two intensive introductory courses for newly-articled clerks; 280 attended. The courses consisted of two full days of lectures to the whole course and thirteen days of tutorials in small classes of up to about twenty students. The lectures to the whole course, given by practising members of the Institute, were on the profession, the Institute and its examinations and standards, and a practical introduction to the basic subjects of bookkeeping and auditing. The tutorial classes were conducted by three of the professional coaches and six local education authority colleges of commerce and technical schools.

The courses are designed for students before they have started either their practical experience in the office or their correspondence courses, and the aim is to make the articled clerk better able to profit from both these sides of his training and to increase his usefulness in the office. It is important, therefore, that principals send their articled clerks right at the start of their training. To provide for the future planning of office work, the Students' Society is arranging three-week courses to begin on the following dates in 1965: January 18th, March 1st, May 10th, October 4th and 25th and November 15th. Further courses will be organized for intermediate dates as required.

These courses are promoted by the Education Committee of the Council and they are being run by the London Students' Society under the supervision of a Joint Committee of the London and District Society and the Students' Society. Other courses are being run by the professional coaches and by at least two outside bodies.

RISE IN POLICE FORCE COSTS

The total cost of police service expenditure in England and Wales, excluding the Metropolitan police area, chargeable to rates and grants at March 31st, 1964, amounted to £107,577,488, an increase of 10 per cent on 1962–63. Of this, 50 per cent was met from specific Government grants and 50 per cent from rates and rate deficiency grant. These figures are shown in the return on Police Force Statistics, 1963–64, published jointly by The Institute of Municipal Treasurers and Accountants and The Society of County Treasurers.

The gross expenditure represented a cost of £1,788 5*s* per police officer and £2,770 6*s* per 1,000 population, whilst the average domestic ratepayer's contribution to the cost of police services was £2 3*s* 5*d* per annum, or about 10*d* per week.

Copies of the return are obtainable from The Institute of Municipal Treasurers and Accountants, 1 Buckingham Place, Westminster, London SW1, price 5*s* each.

BUDGETARY CONTROLLER

for the Accounts Department of their Head Office in St George's House, Croydon, Surrey

This opportunity would suit a young man, aged between 23–30, who has already qualified at Intermediate level with one of the professional accountancy bodies and is now proceeding towards the Final examination. He should also have had fairly wide general accounting experience.

The main function of the successful applicant will be to summarize expenditure, especially that connected with the marketing organization and to prepare statements to show comparisons of expenditure with budget. There will, however, be opportunities to assist with other aspects of accounting.

Working conditions in our new offices are excellent and facilities for staff include a very good restaurant. There is a first-class contributory pension scheme in operation.

If you would like to be considered for this position, please write, with full details of age, qualification, experience, salary required and quoting reference GHH/64/526, to The Personnel Officer, St George's House, Croydon, Surrey.

INTERNAL AUDITOR

(Qualified or Semi-qualified Accountant)

required by an international company to take charge of one of our small teams of internal auditors carrying out investigations and audits throughout the United Kingdom.

Applicants, of British birth, should be aged between 24–30, have wide experience of auditing and preferably be qualified accountants, although we would consider semi-qualified men in the upper-age range, provided that they are suitably experienced.

This position is based in our head office in the South London area, but the successful applicant must be prepared to travel for about 50 per cent of the time.

Salary will be in the range of £1,250–£1,400 per annum and among its benefits the company includes an excellent contributory pension scheme.

If you would like to be considered, please apply, giving full details of age, qualifications, experience to date, and quoting reference GHH/64/343, to Box IA9941.

Saving in perspective

On any view, freedom from fluctuations is of prime importance to the personal saver. An Abbey National shareholding offers this—and much besides. Shares that hold their price, the certainty of a reasonable return (made even more attractive because Abbey National pay the income tax) and withdrawal facilities that are the nearest thing possible to complete liquidity—these features combine stability, yield and flexibility in a way that meets the needs of many. As an accumulating account for the prudent saver, an income-booster for the small investor, or a stabilising factor in larger portfolios, Abbey National is equally advisable—and equally to be advised. We shall be pleased to give you full information on our facilities for investment.

CAREERS FOR ACCOUNTANTS IN LONDON

Peat, Marwick, Mitchell & Co have vacancies in their London office for young qualified accountants who wish to extend their knowledge of accountancy in the widest variety of professional work, including audit, taxation and consultancy work in many branches of industry.

Attractive starting salaries are paid and the prospects of advancement and of promotion are excellent. A varied and responsible career is offered to those wishing to remain in the profession and there are opportunities of transfer to other offices in the United Kingdom and overseas.

There is a pension scheme and three weeks' annual holiday is given.

FOR YOUNG ACCOUNTANTS SEEKING EXPERIENCE IN THE PROFESSION

Cooper Brothers & Co invite applications from young qualified accountants for positions in their London office. Applications from November finalists will also be considered.

The positions offer the opportunity of gaining experience in a wide range of professional work including auditing in large and small businesses of many different kinds, investigations and other kinds of special work. Much of the work will be done in or around London, but the opportunity of short trips to different parts of the country as well as to many overseas countries frequently occurs.

The firm provides a variety of short training courses for its qualified staff including introductory courses for new staff and electronic data processing courses.

Starting salaries are good with excellent prospects for rapid advancement both in grade and salary commensurate with ability and energy. Additional benefits include a pension scheme and luncheon vouchers and there is three weeks' annual leave.

The firm encourages staff to take up permanent careers within its auditing department or in one of its more specialized departments such as taxation and management services. Arrangements can also be made for staff to work either on short secondments or for longer tours with associated firms overseas.

Applications should be sent to the Staff Partner, Abacus House, Gutter Lane, Cheapside, EC2.

PREPARE FOR YOUR FUTURE . . .

with two or three years' professional work expressly planned to give you wide experience and a real opportunity to develop your earning power. There are opportunities for specialization (e.g. systems design, electronic data processing, taxation), for temporary secondment to industrial companies, and for eventual selection for longer term engagements.

The firm is in London EC2, seventy strong, and is cheerful, welcomes new ideas and promotes on merit alone.

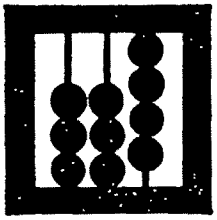
Starting salary £1,200 reviewed after three months and then half-yearly.

These appointments are only open to men who are clearly above average calibre, have at least two 'A' levels and have passed their final at first attempt in November 1963 or later (offers to November 1964 finalists will be conditional on their having passed).

Please write to Box PF7001.

PROFESSIONAL CAREERS

Deloitte, Plender, Griffiths & Co. Vacancies exist for young qualified accountants wishing to obtain post-qualification experience in all aspects of accountancy.



There are excellent prospects of promotion in the firm for those who decide to make the profession their career, and for those who ultimately decide to go into commerce or industry encouragement is given in finding the most suitable openings.

Opportunities arise from time to time for short periods abroad.

Attractive starting salaries are paid, based on qualification and experience.

There is a pension scheme and three weeks' annual holiday is given.

Applications should be addressed to the Staff Partner, 128 Queen Victoria Street, London EC4.

CHARTERED ACCOUNTANTS

A City firm of chartered accountants with an international practice has vacancies for young qualified accountants and November finalists. Vacancies exist in London, Birmingham and Sheffield and in other towns in the Midlands and North of England.

These vacancies provide the opportunity to gain experience of most aspects of professional work, and are particularly suitable for young men who believe that to broaden their experience in the years immediately following qualification is the quickest road to the top in the profession, industry or commerce. They arise largely through the expansion of the firm's practice which is creating a growing requirement for men at managerial and higher levels. The prospects for young men of energy and ability may therefore be considered unusually good.

The firm pays good salaries which are reviewed regularly. Promotion is by ability only. There would be opportunities to travel abroad, short- or long-term assignments, and those who do not wish to make their careers with the firm would be introduced later, where possible to appointments in commerce or industry.

Candidates are invited to write in confidence, giving a short account of their careers to date and stating which part of the country they wish to work in, to Box CA6786.

OVERSEAS

There are, throughout the year, a multitude of professional and commercial posts available across all oceans, in every continent.

THE POST OF THE WEEK

Men and machines or machines and men? There is some feeling in this country that our life is now based on the latter order of predominance. But even granted that there are machines that can build machines and so on ad infinitum, the primary tool or machine must always be human.

An electronics group, based in Herts, interested in the industrial automation field, wish to appoint an accountant/company secretary within the age group 28–35. Candidates should be qualified and have had commercial experience as knowledge of cost accounting for batch production is desirable. For this post a commencing salary in the range £1,700–£1,900 p.a. is envisaged. It is possible, however, that a candidate who meets the requirements in every particular could obtain higher than this range upon commencement.

COMMERCIAL

COMPANY SECRETARY/CHIEF ACCOUNTANT. – For private company in fast expanding group in FOLKESTONE. Qualified, aged up to 40, ideally with export/import experience, excellent prospects. Commencing salary range £1,500–£1,750 p.a.

DEPUTY FINANCIAL ACCOUNTANT. – A.C.A., in his thirties, at least three years' commercial experience preferably manufacturing, for electronics group based Central London. Salary circa £1,850 p.a. or above for the right man.

ASSISTANT TO FINANCIAL ACCOUNTANT. – Intermediate to finalist C.W.A., aged 25–30, staff control experience desirable. Salary up to £1,500 p.a. based NW. LONDON.

INTERNAL AUDITOR. – C.A., aged 25–30, for chemicals company based W1. Very little travelling during two-year stint. Good prospects, salary circa £1,750 p.a.

All inquiries in confidence to Mr MAXWELL YULE.

This is a brief selection from our current register of 110 available appointments for financial and cost accountants (qualified and unqualified) in the salary range £1,000–£2,500 p.a.

COMPANY MEETING

MARTINS BANK LIMITED

COMMENTARY BY THE CHAIRMAN

SIR CUTHBERT B. CLEGG, T.D.

CONTINUED PROGRESS BY THE BANK

Increased Dividend

Sir Cuthbert B. Clegg, T.D., Chairman of Martins Bank Limited, in the course of his statement, which has been circulated to the shareholders with the Statement of Accounts, said:—

Sir John N. Nicholson, Bart., C.I.E., having announced his intention to retire from the chairmanship of the General board of the bank owing to pressure of shipping commitments, relinquished that position after the last Annual General Meeting. His resignation was received by his colleagues on the Board with the greatest regret and I would like to record our appreciation of his untiring and most able conduct of the affairs of the bank during the two years of his chairmanship. It is a pleasure to us that he continues to serve as a member of the General board.

A Successful Year

During 1964 our affairs have shown a very satisfactory buoyancy and our position in the home banking field has been well maintained. Current, deposit and other accounts have increased by £20,809,819 to attain a new peak of £432,575,433, but the average balances for the year were higher by nearly £28,000,000. At the end of the year our liquid assets stood at £132,426,609 representing 30.6% of our deposits. Our advances have, however, risen at a proportionately higher rate than the increase in our deposits and it has therefore been necessary for us to reduce the level of our investments which continue to be valued at or under market prices.

The total of our advances at the end of the year was £230,027,745 (as against £194,257,577 a year ago) and the ratio to deposits at 53% was, in fact, the highest since 1927. The commitments of the bank, especially in the field of short and medium term finance for exports, are such that if they are taken up we may expect a further increase in our advances. The recent guidance given to the Clearing Banks by the Governor of the Bank of England will serve to endorse publicly the need to channel the banks' limited lending resources into those sectors of the economy which are of the greatest national interest.

The past year has seen an upward movement in interest rates. Bank Rate, the governing factor, was raised from 4% to 5% on 27th February and sharply to 7% on 23rd November, an average rate of just over 5% for the year. This has resulted in an increase in our net interest earnings but our expenses also show a further increase. Nevertheless, we have been able to reverse the slight recession in profits which occurred a year ago and our net profit for 1964 is £1,670,564 (against £1,425,329 for 1963) after making allocations to inner reserves consistent with our expanded commitments. We paid an interim dividend of 7% and are now recommending a final dividend of 8% making a total of 15% for the year against 14% last year: we are also making appropriations from the published profit of £250,000 to Reserve for contingencies and £200,000 to Premises Redemption.

New Branches Opened

Our policy of expansion by the opening of new branches has continued. This year we have opened twelve offices in various parts of the country and work is well in hand for a further twenty, the majority of which will be opened in 1965. We have also extended our trustee business by opening a branch office in Middlesbrough; another will be established during the next few months in Preston when the rebuilding of our banking office in Fishergate is completed. At the same time our extensive programme of branch modernisation continues.

Additional Electronic Equipment

We have almost reached the maximum load which we can place on the Pegasus computer operating in Liverpool. As a result of our experience we have decided to proceed with a further installation, but this time it will be in London near to the seat of our Clearing House operations. We have ordered computers and supporting equipment, including automatic sorters capable of reading information direct from the sorting operation of the cheques and feeding the data into the computer for bookkeeping purposes. Delivery of this equipment will take place towards the end of the year or very early in 1966.

The Recent Sterling Crisis

The year has passed against a national background of gathering economic storm clouds; the difficulties of the Autumn developed into a crisis of international confidence in sterling. Now if confidence is damaged the value of a currency may be impaired even though there may be international support as substantial as the $3,000m. credit recently provided for the pound. Confidence is therefore a most vital asset.

Confidence

Confidence in our economic future is built up at three levels—Government, industry and commerce, and the community. Sensible Government policies can create confidence even in the face of economic difficulties, while imprudence or a lack of realism can cause a breakdown of confidence even where economic conditions are propitious. In particular, a Government has to recognise its responsibility for creating conditions in which industry and commerce and the community can achieve what they are capable of achieving, unhampered by unnecessary restrictions or inhibiting taxation. If enterprise is to be permitted to operate effectively, industry must, as far as is consistent with the national interest, be permitted to follow the course which is most profitable to it; not unnaturally it may hesitate to take the exporting plunge. Moreover, exports cannot effectively be increased merely by suppressing home market demand, for this tends to reduce productivity, discourage expansion and cause unemployment. A dependable home market is essential to almost any industry which is to succeed in the export market. The only effective way, however, of correcting our economic deficiencies and thereby restoring international confidence is by expanding our exports, for here lies the key to real prosperity and real affluence. Management must realise the need for aggressive enterprise; the need for understanding in its dealings with labour must be honestly tackled. On the other hand, labour must recognise the problems facing management; it must recognise the advantage of the acceptance of new techniques, mechanisation and economies; and it must appreciate that the enterprise in which it is engaged cannot remain competitive unless it can earn profits and attract capital.

It is not by economic and political expedients that our recovery will be effected. The whole community must realise our position and act to put it right; the essential ingredients are national leadership, intelligent direction, ample capital resources, a thrusting forward with educational and training facilities for industry and commerce, and honest hard work. The dangers are real and the breathing-space afforded to us is short, but the nation has overcome such challenges before and will do so again.

Developments in Cost Accounting

Authorized for publication by the Council of The Institute of Chartered Accountants in England and Wales, this book is a report of the Cost Accounting Subcommittee set up by the Taxation and Financial Relations Committee (now known as the Taxation and Research Committee) of the Institute. The subcommittee endeavoured to state concisely the main principles on which sound costing should be based and the respects in which it considered cost accounting had proved inadequate or inefficient.

From the Foreword by the President of the Institute:

'For those engaged in industry or commerce the report will enable them to review their own systems of cost accounting, whilst for those engaged in public accountancy, it will provide an introduction to a subject that greatly merits their attention as being one which will play an increasingly important part in the framework of the future. . . . It is my sincere hope that this book will receive the attention it so well deserves in the interests of the future development of cost accounting.'

New Terrors

IT was said of a certain biographer that he had added a new terror to death. This accusation can also be levelled at the new CHANCELLOR OF THE EXCHEQUER. His threatened general capital gains tax is to apply, paradoxically enough, to a supposed gain when the owner of an asset dies. Lord Justice HARMAN, when giving judgment in a case concerning a settlement made by the late RUDYARD KIPLING, said 'Death, as we know, is an awfully big adventure, but even the Crown admits that it is not an associated operation'. Whatever moderation may have been observed by the Crown on that occasion, it seems clear that as far as the CHANCELLOR is concerned death is certainly a 'disposal' of assets. They are to be valued as at the date of death and any 'gain' is to be assessed on the personal representatives.

One might well have expected that in so far as an estate was charged to capital gains tax, it would be allowed exemption from estate duty. However, this is not so. True, the capital gains tax is allowed to be deducted as a testamentary expense, and only what is left will be charged to estate duty. However, this is a necessary provision, since otherwise an estate could be bearing a combined tax of more than 100 per cent. The first £5,000 of capital gains deemed to arise on the death will be exempt, and presumably this exemption will be in addition to the various exemptions which would apply to a living taxpayer, such as that in favour of a residence which is disposed of.

On the other hand, this £5,000 exemption will apparently apply regardless of the size of the estate. A tiny estate of, say, £6,000, of which £5,500 represents the notional 'gain' on a fortunate acquisition, will pay capital gains tax. An estate of £1 million which includes only £5,000 'capital gain' will not bear capital gains tax.

Informed opinion has long argued that a mutation tax such as the present estate duty is fundamentally wrong and should be replaced by an inheritance tax, under which the capacity of the heir to pay is more fully taken into account. If a man leaves £1 million among a great many paupers, or to charities, that £1 million is taxed at 80 per cent which in effect is an 80 per cent tax on the pauper legatees. It would be far more just, and more conducive to equality, if the legatee's burden was proportioned to his means.

Notwithstanding this opposition to a mutation tax at all, the CHANCELLOR is adding a second one. The conception of gain is understandable in the case of a living person; it loses all sense in the case of a person who has died.

Two taxes in place of one may well be a welcome innovation for those people whose livelihood depends on collecting (or advising on) taxes; it can have little real appeal to anyone else. Those familiar with the process of satisfying the estate duty authorities about estate duty know well enough what a complicated and time-consuming process it is. As from next April the unfortunate personal representatives will also have to take part in an involved inquest into the deceased's history of acquisitions, including an inquiry into the consideration which he gave for the various assets which he has left behind.

That the new tax will increase the total weight of death duties is obvious. To those who are anxious to take avoiding action in order to safeguard their widows, dependants, and families, a new sense of urgency will be added. At the same time, even disregarding the possibility of death, many people who contemplate making inter vivos gifts may well be induced to hasten. This is because any gift after next April will be deemed for capital gains tax purposes to be a sale at market value and may therefore attract capital gains tax. Thus if an estate owner has been contemplating passing on the family estate to his son, who will have some thirty years' expectation of life prior to passing the estate on to his son, there is much to be said for making the gift before April.

This situation has induced a company of insurance brokers, which specializes in estate duty advice, to circularize its clients as a matter of urgency. The circular recognizes that precise information as to the new tax will not be available until the coming Budget is revealed, and that 'in the ordinary course any prudent man would shudder at the thought of acting in the dark'. However, it observes that these are not normal times. 'If an estate owner acts before Budget Day as, for instance, by making a divestment, he will at least avoid liability for capital gains tax'. He will also, of course, lose the asset he divests himself of. Perhaps after all there is something to be said for waiting until the worst is known; at least before making a gift which had not already been decided on regardless of the new tax.

A director of the same company has written a second edition of his book which points the way to estate duty avoidance, largely by means of insurance policies[1]. The first edition was reviewed in our issue of June 1st, 1963. That edition cost 35*s* and had 287 pages, as against the 40*s* and the 237 pages of the second edition. It does not deal with capital gains tax for the simple reason that it went to press before even the present Government came into power. However, it is devoted to the twin themes of divestment and life insurance, which will retain their importance – indeed increase it, when the new tax is in operation.

One of the criticisms levelled (not by this journal) at the first edition was that the nineteen worked examples were unduly concentrated on comparatively large (and therefore comparatively rare) estates. The author has met this criticism handsomely by introducing six new examples of estates of more modest size. As in the first nineteen, the payment of insurance premiums not surprisingly figures quite largely, but one detects a slight falling off of emphasis on insurance, and a greater emphasis on divestment, and on so wording one's will as to produce a fairly painless estate duty advantage on the subsequent death of one's surviving spouse. In the tables setting out the net saving to be expected from the various schemes, there is a tendency to show the proceeds of insurance policies on the credit side, but to omit the premiums from the debit side – presumably on the grounds that policy proceeds are capital; premiums are revenue.

The author has dropped his unfortunate reference in the first edition to section 164 of the Law of Property Act, 1925. On the other hand, there are some assertions in the book which could well be modified. He says on page 185 that > 'It has been established in a number of Court cases that since it is a husband's duty to live with his wife his continued residence in the house after transfer to his wife will not constitute a reserved benefit which would invalidate the gift for estate duty purposes.'

One would like to know what Court cases these were. It seems to us that if a husband conveys the matrimonial home to his wife by way of gift but continues to live in it as before, then it cannot be said that the wife has enjoyed the house to the entire exclusion of the husband and of any benefit to him, within the meaning of section 11 of the Customs and Inland Revenue Act, 1889. The fact that section 11 may not in practice be applied to such a case seems to rest mainly, if not entirely, on concession.

Sound and Exciting

'SOUND and exciting' were the words used by Mr BERTRAM NELSON, C.B.E., F.C.A., when referring to the development of professional education which could flow from the study conference held at The Further Education Staff College, Blagdon, last July. A full report of this conference on the education and training of articled clerks sponsored jointly by The Institute of Chartered Accountants in England and Wales and the Staff College has now been published.

Those attending the conference included teachers at the universities and at colleges of further education; representatives of correspondence and private tutorial organizations; and representatives of the district societies and the Council of the Institute. The full list of members of the conference appears in an appendix to the report and itself is an indication of a notable change of attitude by the Institute in the last sixteen years. Many members will recall the blunt words the Council employed in 1951 when issuing a statement in reply to the Report of the Carr-Saunders Committee; that statement questioned the ability of colleges of further education to make any contribution to the education of articled clerks. Now, in 1965, the Council has come to recognize the immense developments which have come about in higher education.

The Blagdon Report in no way denigrates the value of correspondence courses, indeed, it states explicitly that these will continue to play an important role. The emphasis, however, is overwhelmingly on the contribution which courses of oral tution (i.e. courses comprising lectures, tutorials, seminars, and the working of exercises and tests to assist the student to learn) may play in the education and training of articled clerks.

Co-operation in the promotion of courses will entail a considerable increase in the amount of work falling on district societies of the Institute. The conference visualized that course centres will probably need to be limited in number in order to maintain satisfactory standards and that tuition centres would be selected by district societies in consultation with the Institute's Education Committee through H.M. Inspectors of Education. District societies have already established education subcommittees which have made substantial progress in the promotion of introductory courses for newly articled clerks; by the autumn of 1964 these courses were available in the areas of all district societies. In some areas revision, pre-examination and other courses at later stages of articles have already commenced.

Where to from here? There has, since 1945, been a revolution in further education; that revolution is still in progress and has just commenced to touch the accountancy profession. The complexity of modern business and industrial life is such that the education and training of accountants at the highest level needs to be brought into line with the requirements of the second half of the twentieth century. The future is bound to bring about a pattern of further education which embodies the concept of a partnership between the education service and the outside world – if only because that world is not truly 'outside'.

This is the part which has been the experience of all leading professions. Medicine, law and architecture, by way of example only, have all at various times participated in the apparent separation between education on the one hand and training on the other. All these professions have seen the assumed conflict between the theoretical and the practical. All have come to accept that there is no inherent conflict but that education and training are complementary and that they cannot be divorced from each other. These professions have all trodden the same awkward path so that they now recognize that they have a responsibility far beyond the mere production of adequate technicians.

The accountancy profession will travel this road; of that there can be no doubt. The academic and the practitioner have much to teach each other. They ought both to be engaged in achieving the same objectives. The partnership is vital to the future of the profession. The present proposals in the report of the Blagdon Conference may be 'true and ultra-cautious'. But they represent the beginning of something which will grow apace in a short period of time and can lead to a 'sound and exciting' system of professional education.

A New Look at Leasing

by M. GORDON WRIGHT, B.Com., A.A.C.C.A., F.C.C.S.
Lecturer in the Department of Management Studies, The Polytechnic, London

THE leasing of capital goods is not, of course, a new phenomenon in the business world. The renting of land and buildings has a very long and well-established history as a means of acquiring their use in a business as against purchasing them outright. Even so it is doubtful whether, until recent times, the leasing of real estate has played a deliberate part in the financial planning of business operations; rather it has been a matter of convenience or opportunity. The part that leasing of property can play in financing a business has been amply demonstrated by notable business men such as Mr Charles Clore who showed how the capital value locked up in bricks and mortar could be released for use in expanding the business by selling the property and in return taking a long lease.

This technique of 'sale and lease-back' is now well known; but, of course, its usefulness is limited by the extent to which one's capital is tied up in land and buildings. For the company with little floor space, but a large investment in plant and machinery, stocks and debtors, a sale and lease-back operation has a very limited value. And so a new range of leasing and allied techniques has arisen which include the leasing of plant and machinery and the outright sale of book debts.

The leasing of plant and machinery has been practised to a certain extent for many years – one of the principal sources being plant and machinery supplied by Government departments under plant extension schemes for which the business paid an annual rental.

The present trend in leasing is of a very much more general application. When considering the purchase of new equipment, the business man has, in general, the choice of buying it outright or entering into a leasing arrangement with one of the many commercial organizations which offer this service. This choice also extends to such items as office equipment, motor vehicles and computers.

Under the leasing arrangement the leasing company buys the required equipment from the manufacturer and then leases it to the user. The leasing company receives the capital allowances from the Inland Revenue and charges the user a rent which, over a fixed number of years, will recover its net outlay plus a loading to cover interest and other charges. Beyond this fixed period a nominal rent is charged for as long as the user keeps the equipment. There can be no provision in the agreement for the user to buy the equipment outright at any time since this would make the agreement a hire-purchase agreement.

Factoring of Book Debts

A further scheme which is of more recent origin is the factoring of book debts. The usual arrangement here is that when invoicing a customer a business can turn the invoice into cash by selling the debt to the factoring company, which then has full title to the debt. Whether the factoring company or its client collects the money from the customer depends on the particular type of arrangement entered into.

The extensive use of these practices by the individual firm can have a very great impact on the asset structure of the business, and the time would seem to be ripe for an examination of the practical effects of this type of financing on the other sources of capital for use in a business and, in particular, the effect it can have on the cover and earnings for holders of prior charges on the business, the ordinary shareholder, and also the security of the creditors. There should follow from this, serious thought as to whether the published accounts of a company should show the extent of leasing and similar operations where they are material.

Let us first consider the implications for the holders of a prior charge on the assets of a business, e.g. debenture-holders. The terms on which the debenture was issued would probably have contained some limitation on the issue of further debentures, etc., which carried rights equivalent or superior to the existing debenture. Holders of such a debenture would also have the expectation that the general asset pattern would not vary greatly in the future. If, however, the business was still short of funds, there is nothing in such terms which will prevent it from entering into extensive leasing arrangements which would have the effect of creating a new class of people with claims against the assets used in the business whose security would be superior to all others because they have, in fact, legal title to the assets involved. Of course, the published accounts of the business would not show this since, as the business does not own the assets, they do not enter into the accounts at all, but this is only a further argument for noting in some way on the accounts, details of leasing agreements that have been entered into.

The debenture-holder in such circumstances is no longer the holder of the first charge against the assets the business uses but only certain assets to which the business has retained the legal title. Similarly, if book debts are factored at the time of invoicing under an agreement which transfers title to the debt to the factoring company, then a further slice of assets – this time one which is continually maturing into cash – is removed from the cover given to the debenture, assuming it contains a floating charge against the assets.

Financial Implications

Let us now look at the effect of leasing on the operations of a company, and trace the financial implications for other suppliers of funds to the business. The XYZ Co Ltd has outstanding £¼ million 5½ per cent Debentures 1980–85, secured by a floating charge on the assets of the company, with a prohibition on the creation of new debentures with equivalent or prior charge on the assets. The balance sheet as at December 31st, 1963, is as shown at Fig. 1.

The directors at their meeting on January 1st, 1964, approved a plan providing for a 50 per cent expansion in the buildings, plant and machinery of the business which they anticipated would result in a 50 per cent expansion in turnover and trading profits. In view of the cash position they decide to finance the expansion by the following means:

(a) to sell the factory after the extension is complete for the then book value of £225,000 and take a long lease at a rental of £18,000 per annum;

(b) to lease all the new plant and machinery on leases providing for a full rental for five years followed by a rental at a nominal rate for the remainder of the lease. The cost of the new plant and machinery is £300,000 and the annual rent is £60,000;

(c) to factor the increase in book debts on terms giving the factoring company ½ per cent on turnover (estimated at a total of £2,400,000 p.a.) plus 6 per cent on balances outstanding with the factoring company of approximately £155,000;

(d) any surplus cash arising from these operations to be used to pay off the bank loan.

It is not proposed to follow through these transactions from a strictly accounting point of view since this would, as already noted, exclude these transactions from the accounts of the company, other than the charges made for rent, etc. Instead the effect of this policy will be examined in terms of the assets employed in the business and the way in which they are financed. For comparative purposes the tables also include the position as it would be if the expansion had been financed by a rights issue to the ordinary shareholders.

Expansion in Assets Employed

Part A of Fig. 2 shows the expansion in the assets employed by the company as a result of the implementation of the decision by the board. In the third column of this table, which shows the position after the leasing operation, the item Land and Buildings is no longer the property of the company, nor is £300,000 of the cost value of the plant and machinery, and £155,000 of the value of debtors.

Part B of Fig. 2 shows how the expansion has been financed, the sources of the funds being arranged in order of their priority of claim against the assets. The percentage column shows, in addition, the proportion of the funds each of the sources has supplied.

Looking first at the columns showing the position before the change, and as it would have been had the expansion been financed by a rights issue, it should be noted that in the first case the debenture-holders had a first claim against the assets and they had provided 23·5 per cent of the funds. If there had been a rights issue they would still have first claim on the assets but owing to the expansion of the company their proportion of the funds has fallen to 14·4 per cent. To that extent their position would have been improved by such an operation.

With the method undertaken by the board, however, it can be seen that the result has been the creation of a security superior to the debenture, and which has absolute right to the first 39·1 per cent of the gross assets used in the business. The rights of the debenture-holders rank only after this charge, and in terms of priority percentages the debentures have dropped from 0–23·5 to 39·1–53·5 per cent, as against the position at December 31st, 1963, or from 0–14·4 to 39·1–53·5 per cent as against the alternative financing procedure. Yet this method of financing the expansion has not conflicted in any way with the terms of the debenture prohibiting the creation of prior charges.

This deterioration of the cover for the debentures may not, however, be the only way in which they will suffer. The charge for the financing facilities that have been made available by these means also rank prior to the interest on the debenture, and although the trading profits before such charges may have increased by the anticipated 50 per cent, the charges may more than absorb the increase to the detriment of the cover for the debenture interest.

Fig. 3 (A) shows the earnings and distribution position prior to the changes made, the figures in italics being those that would have appeared in the published accounts for the year. All the figures in Fig. 3 are shown both before and after tax so that the taxation issue does not affect the problem.

Fig. 3 (B) shows the position after the changes on the assumption that the expansion was financed by a rights issue of two for one at par, yielding a net £590,000 after issue expenses and that a dividend of 10 per cent was paid. From this it will be seen that the increase in earnings before tax of £40,000 is 6⅔ per cent on the new money put in by the ordinary shareholders.

Fig. 3 (C) shows the position after putting into effect the board's decision. It can be seen that in spite of the 50 per cent increase in trading profits, the earnings before depreciation and interest have dropped from £140,000 to £124,100, and the cover for the debenture interest has been correspondingly reduced.

Position of Creditors

The effect of such a financing operation as has been described on the interests of creditors, and preference and ordinary shareholders should not be lost sight of. The security of the creditors and the cover for the preference shareholders have both been adversely affected, and the earnings position of both preference and ordinary shareholders are vitally affected by the standing charges created by such an operation.

As the law now stands there is no need to show any details of leasing and factoring operations in the published accounts, yet where equipment is being acquired under a hire-purchase it is shown in the balance sheet, which must also show – by way of a note – commitments entered into for the future purchase of fixed assets. The published profit and loss account will also show the annual charge for depreciation of fixed assets.

Is it not time that the accountancy profession gave serious thought to the inclusion of details of leasing, factoring, and similar operations in the published accounts where the amounts are material? Should not such information be available to investors, lenders, and creditors so that their interests can be properly safeguarded? This could be done by way of a note in the accounts indicating the value of assets leased and debts factored, together with the annual charge which has been made in the accounts for such services. Where new debentures are to be issued some thought should also be given to the inclusion in the terms of the issue of a prohibition or restriction on the use of leasing and factoring operations.

It should begin to be recognized that leasing and factoring are sources of funds for use in the business in the same way as are borrowing, using creditors' money, and shareholders' funds. The recourse to these newer methods of financing is no more than the exercise of choice between a number of alternatives, and where their use is material this fact should be reflected in the accounts in the same way as any of the more traditional ways of obtaining finance.

The Capital Gains Tax – II

CONTRIBUTED

THE Chancellor's statement of December 8th last, says that 'the charge to tax on a gain realized after next Budget day will not be on an amount greater than any gain that is realized'. Whether or not these words connote the possibility that the charge could be on an amount less than any gain that is realized, they seem clearly to imply that a gain realized after next Budget day will not be chargeable where there has been no capital gain between the date of acquisition and the date of realization. Thus, if a stock valued at £80 next Budget day was bought for £100 in 1964 and is sold for £100 in 1966, there will be no net gain. If the same stock is worth £80 on Budget day, but was bought for £60 in 1964 and is sold for £100 in 1966, the chargeable gain will be limited to £20. On the other hand, if the stock is worth £90 on Budget day, but was bought for £100 in 1964 and is sold for £120 in 1966, the chargeable gain will not be £30, but £20. In other words, the purchase price of the stock or its value on Budget day, 1965, whichever is the higher, will be taken as the base price.

Losses

In the case of short-term gains a Case VII loss can be set off against a Case VII gain of the same year or subsequent years, but not against a Case VII gain of previous years or against other income; but a trade loss can be set off against a Case VII gain.

In the case of the new tax the Chancellor's statement has this to say:

> 'Relief for realized losses will be given primarily against any gains realized in the same year, any excess of losses being allowed to be carried forward without time-limit and set against future gains. For assets acquired before next Budget day relief will be given only for the due proportion of the loss which accrued after that date.'

Accordingly, where a loss is realized on the sale of an asset owned on Budget day, the loss will normally be limited to the difference between the sale price and the Budget day value. Thus, if a stock is worth £80 on Budget day, but was bought for £100 in 1964 and is sold for £60 in 1966, the loss will be £20. On the other hand, if the same stock is worth £110 on Budget day, but was bought for £100 in 1964 and is sold for £60 in 1966, the allowable loss will be £40, not £50. Put in another way, any loss for tax purposes will be based on the original buying price if this is lower than the value next Budget day. This seems to be inherent in the words 'relief will be given only for the due proportion of the loss which accrued after that day'.

It seems, too, that losses are to be allowed only against taxable capital gains, and not against other income. This contrasts somewhat with the position in the United States where, in the case of an individual, net losses can be offset against other income up to $1,000 a year with the balance carried forward to five years. In the case of a company, losses can be carried forward indefinitely, but can only be offset against capital gains. It is, of course, not yet known what the relationship is going to be between the new tax and the existing short-term tax, but in America short-term losses are offset against short-term gains and long-term losses against long-term gains. If, however, there are losses and gains in each category, the two are combined to arrive at an overall net balance, short-term or long-term.

One consequence of the new tax (subject to what is said later about capital allowances) would appear to be to give a fillip to the purchase of expensive motor-cars and other chattels with a high rate of depreciation, so as to form a fund of allowable losses to set against chargeable gains. But each chattel will have to be sold well before the price falls to £1,000 unless it is possible to combine two or more chattels in 'a single transaction (of sale) standing alone'.

Valuation

It seems almost incredible, since next Budget day is to be the base date for the new tax, that the Chancellor's statement should say nothing whatever about the acceptable method of valuing unquoted assets. In The Times of December 12th, a correspondent asked:

> 'Is Mr Callaghan going to produce by Budget day a Domesday Book giving the value of all land and buildings, and chattels too? If not, how does he suggest they are to be valued for the purposes of the capital gains tax? Anyone concerned with the assessment of estate duty knows only too well the uncertainties and delays that already exist whenever the value of any property has to be agreed with the Revenue. Anyone can tell, even fifty years later, the value of a quoted security at a given date, but who can value retrospectively with any degree of accuracy a field or a farm or an unrecognized Fragonard'.

For the private individual the problem will be largely solved by the fact that his dwelling-house is exempt, his motor-car is depreciating, his investments are probably quoted ones, and he rarely possesses paintings or works of art worth more than £1,000 apiece. The main burden rests on the owners of unincorporated businesses and directors of unquoted companies, the latter of whom are left in complete ignorance as to whether there may be two different bases of valuation for capital gains tax as for estate duty, namely, the open market method and the assets basis. In any case, it would appear that each asset which can be sold independently should be valued independently, so that the amount of work and record-keeping the new tax can entail over the years can be quite nightmarish.

In the case of the existing capital gains tax, the Finance Act, 1962, Schedule 9, paragraph 17 (5), provides for the amount of any capital allowances (but not investment allowances) received by the taxpayer, in so far as they exceed the amount on which any balancing charges fall to be made on him, to be added to the price received on the disposal of the asset. No doubt similar, though more complicated, provisions will apply in the case of the new tax; though, if capital allowances are to be depreciated as a result of corporation tax, the burden of the addition will be correspondingly eased.

Inflation

At the annual meeting of the Savings Bank of Glasgow on December 21st, 1964, the chairman, Mr Alastair Lean, referred to the built-in inflation in the economy and said this was commonly conceded by the main political parties at around 3½ per cent per annum; and that in the last twenty-five years all savings in the form of cash had lost 70 per cent of their purchasing power through inflation, whereas the value of equities had largely kept pace with inflation over the same period.

Another correspondent in The Times very pertinently drew attention to the place of inflation in any capital gains scheme and said that, because of inflation, many long-term gains were partly or wholly illusory. He argued that such gains should be measured in real terms, and not in those of a depreciating currency, and that a Government collecting taxes on long-term gains measured in purely monetary terms had a vested interest in continuing inflation.

In the previous issue (page 32) reference was made to the Labour Party's 1962 plan for capital gains tax, under which the chargeable gain was to fall to one-quarter only after forty-one years of retention. It is far from certain that any such concessions as are embraced by the plan (meagre though they are) will materialize, but even if they do, it is very clear that any benefits they confer will be more than absorbed by the inflationary spiral, if it continues at anything like the present rate. Quite obviously, since the new tax is a long-term tax, any rate other than a low one will be a crass injustice.

Betting

The exclusion of football pool and betting winnings from the scope of the new tax has been criticized in one quarter as 'a strange judgement of the respective values to the community of thrift and gambling', but it is felt that this view fails to take into account all the relevant factors.

In Graham v. Green (9 T.C. 309) the taxpayer was in the habit of betting on horses at starting prices from his home address, and did this on a large and sustained scale and with such shrewdness and success that he made an income out of it. This income was found by the General Commissioners to be substantially his sole means of livelihood, and he appealed to the High Court against an assessment to tax in respect of it. Rowlatt, J., said it had been contended by the Revenue that the taxpayer had set up a vocation, but this contention was one which, if sound, would have very startling results. A loss in a vocation or trade could be set off against profits, with the result that a taxpayer earning a profit in some recognized form of industry but 'frequently, persistently, continuously and systematically' betting with bookmakers could squander the fruits of his industry 'and make the State a partner in his gambling'.

As bookmakers are already taxed and, among punters, there are more losers than winners, the Revenue is apparently not anxious to alter the present position. True, the position for capital gains purposes is not the same as that for income tax purposes since, in the case of the gains tax, losses can, apparently, only be set off against capital gains, while most punters will have little or no gains, so that the Revenue can hardly lose. The other alternative would be to allow losses against other income up to a very modest limit, as is generally the position in the United States, but it is unlikely that this will be done.

The excise duty on football pools was reduced from 33 per cent to 25 per cent by section 7 of the Finance Act, 1964, so that at first blush something might be done here; but the same section applied the reduced rate of duty for the first time to fixed-odds coupon betting with quite disastrous results, as it has driven some of the smaller firms out of business and severely curtailed the activities of some of the larger ones. To tax fixed-odds dividends would be the last straw, while it would be necessary to do something by way of loss relief for the army of weekly losers if pool dividends were to be subjected to the gains tax.

Gilt-edged

In The Financial Times of December 18th, a leading article said the institutions had virtually suspended their normal buying of gilt-edged securities; that the Government broker was forced the previous day to take drastic action in an attempt to resore some confidence to the gilt-edged market, and that to keep the market working the authorities had had to make known prices at which they stood ready, for an unstated period, to buy every stock in the list of Government securities, except the short-dated ones. By doing so, said the article, the authorities had not only sacrificed their freedom of manoeuvre, but had embarked on an open-market operation which ran counter to the stated aims of monetary policy, and there could be few more striking illustrations of the extent to which the market in Government stocks was then demoralized.

This unhappy situation was not blamed wholly on the new tax proposals, but the assumption that the new tax would apply to the appreciation which quoted Government stocks normally experience as they approach maturity was held to be partly responsible. This assumption, of course, derives from the fact that the Chancellor's statement of December 8th specifically excluded from the scope of the tax National Savings Certificates and National Development Bonds, but made no reference to any other kind of Government security.

Funding 3½ per cent stock 1999–2004 at 80
Treasury 3½ per cent stock 1979–1981 at 81
Treasury 5 per cent stock 1986–1989 at 84½

These three stocks, at the time of writing, are quoted at discounts of nineteen points, eight points and half a point, respectively, but as their maturity dates draw near they may be expected to stand around one hundred.

The Arguments

According to one view the profit on Government stocks like the above, representing the difference between the price of issue of the stock and the redemption value, should be subject to the gains tax like any other form of appreciation; and it is contended that there is no difference between the case of Government stocks issued at a discount and the debenture stock of a commercial or industrial concern issued at a discount, but this seems to be very much a minority view.

The terms of issue of a Government stock which is dated make it plain that the stock will be repaid at a given price by a given date, and this forms part of the contract between Government and lender. The profit on redemption also forms part of the yield on the stock and determines the place the new stock will occupy alongside comparable stocks. The Financial Times, for example, shows against every Government stock, not only the interest yield, but also the yield on redemption, which is really the important factor. Moreover, had it been indicated at the time of issue of a Government stock that the profit on redemption was liable to be taxed, the response would either have been less favourable or the issue could not have been made at all except on terms much more onerous to the Government.

The question whether the profit on redemption of Government stocks should be subjected to the new tax is one involving very large figures, but it is far more important that the Government should be absolved from any suggestion of breach of contract or breach of faith or partial default in its interest payments than that it should whittle down the cost of servicing the different loans by taxing the profit on redemption. If this is to be done at all, then the time to start doing it is when the next new issue is made, so that every subscriber to it will know what he is about and there can be no possible charge of bad faith. Again, where a Government loan has been issued at par, so that no question of any profit on redemption arises, there can be no possibility of subjecting the interest on the loan to capital gains tax, so why should the interest on one Government loan be taxed and not another?

AUTHOR'S CORRECTION: In line 28 of the second column on page 32 of the issue of January 9th, last, the words '£1,000 or more' should read 'less than £1,000'.

extended a welcome to the President of the Institute, Mr W. Guy Densem, F.C.A.

The guest speaker at the luncheon was Sir Melford Stevenson, one of Her Majesty's Judges, who looked in a light-hearted way at chartered accountants from the viewpoint of the law. Sir Melford said that over the years he had acquired a deep reverence for chartered accountants, but there had been a time when he thought they were rather a useless luxury – that, he added, was in the days when he had only slight difficulties with his tax return.

Sir Melford said that in his young days he and his fellow barristers were most fortunate in that a dear old lady employed in the office of the local Inspector of Taxes had developed an extraordinarily broad-minded view about expenses. It became well known among the young men of the Temple that if you went to see her you received a most remarkable degree of help. Unfortunately, added Sir Melford, a most unhappy thing occurred – she retired; and she was succeeded by an earnest young man whose eye was fixed on a brilliant future with the Inland Revenue (in fact, he admitted that he really wanted to be in the Investigation Department!). It was for this reason, said Sir Melford, that he came to realize that a chartered accountant was a necessity.

CHAPTER 259

THE Young Accountant hitched his chair forward, looked round and exploded with helpless indignation. 'Did you see that programme on TV last night showing up the accountant as an incompetent chancer? It's a shame and a scandal. They're always running us down.'

The Middle-Aged Accountant chewed his pipe-stem and brooded. 'The powers-that-be should do something about it. The profession's getting a rotten bad name. I bring it up at every meeting but we get nowhere.'

The Elderly Accountant sipped his beer with calm superiority. 'There's no point in making a fuss. Suffer fools gladly, you know. It's our job to get on with our work and ignore that sort of cheap muck-raking.'

I said: 'Why don't we do something definite?'

The Young Accountant looked sulphurous. 'The crowd watching the show in my fiancée's house started jeering at her poor taste in picking an accountant. She got so upset she nearly gave me back the ring.'

The M.-A.A. gulped at his tankard. 'The recent article in that intellectual weekly was worse; it turned us all into a bunch of inky-fingered clerks doing tots. Why do we never seem to take the initiative? We answer back pompously when somebody throws a brick at us, but it's notorious that nobody reads rebuttals. The damage is done to us by the first attack.'

The E.A. was calm and methodical. 'Listen, chaps, you don't have to blow your tops. This sort of mud-slinging has gone on for decades but the profession hasn't really suffered. In fact, we've gone from strength to strength. We're represented on Government commissions and committees; we hold more directorships than ever before in our history; our status is high where it counts, among those that need us.'

I said: 'Captain, art tha' sleeping there below?'

This poetic irrelevancy infuriated the Y.A. into bad language. 'That's just so-and-so nonsense about not really suffering. Maybe you established types don't, but we others do. I lost a client in last night's argument; the old fool said he'd better engage a consultant rather than an accountant after what he'd seen. That's happening all the time.'

The M.-A.A. banged his pipe so hard that it broke. 'We never do anything but talk. We argue about integration or written-up asset values when our very existence is at stake; we've got to boost our public image or risk becoming third-raters in both pay and prestige.'

The E.A. called for the same again, and tried to help. 'Damn it all, there's nothing we can do, chaps. We can't make accountancy interesting to the public. We know our job's important; we're proud of it; we even enjoy it. But let's face it, we've no glamour or excitement or human interest to show for ourselves. People just wouldn't look at films about dull-as-ditchwater backroom types sitting hunched over fusty ledgers or pontificating about section 34 claims.'

I said: 'Why are ye fearful, O ye of little faith?'

The other two snorted. 'Cut out the fancy frills and suggest something constructive. It's an emergency.'

I said: 'Utilize mass media. A good impactful series about an accountant's job, dramatizing his contribution to the struggle for survival of businesses big and small, should pay off. It's a natural; everyone depends on a pay-packet or an investment somewhere; it'll get top rating.'

The E.A. looked outraged. 'We don't do that sort of thing; it's unprecedented. Anyhow it would never work; there's nothing dramatic about business.'

He's forgotten that:

'Confound Romance . . . And all unseen
Romance brought up the nine-fifteen.'

Reviews

Advanced Cost Accountancy

Second edition, by J. E. SMITH, A.C.W.A., and J. C. W. DAY, B.COM.(LOND.), F.A.C.C.A. (Gee & Co (Publishers) Ltd, London. 25*s* net.)

In the course of reading this book the reviewer was reminded by the authors of many points forgotten long since he passed his professional examinations many years ago.

This is the real value of this book; the first 113 pages deal with all aspects and methods of cost accountancy, apart from mechanization. The remaining sixty-five pages are devoted entirely to examination questions and answers.

The student reading the first part, as a revision of his studies, and then conscientiously working through the questions, should have little difficulty in arriving at the correct answers which may be checked by reference to the book, and in then approaching his examination with complete confidence.

The list of variances and the short passage on costing in relation to price fixing is particularly useful.

As a source of reference and reminder Advanced Cost Accountancy can be confidently recommended as a worth-while acquisition to anyone who has passed the intermediate stage of examinations but has not yet reached retirement age!

Product Analysis Pricing

by WILFRED BROWN and ELLIOTT JAQUES. (Heinemann Educational Books Ltd, London. 18*s* net.)

The authors take only 128 pages to expound a new approach to the setting of selling prices. Yet the first fifty pages are rightly devoted to a statement of the pricing problem – with special reference to that of jobbing industries – and a critique of existing costing methods. Thus it is only at page 53 that the new technique is introduced to the reader.

This amounts to an analysis of the product in terms of the bought components, material content, product properties (size, complexity, etc.), and feature properties (design, accuracy, area, diameter, etc.), which will be deemed valuable by the customer. The method of analysis is described and the way in which reasonable, but controlled freedom can be given to sales executives in fixing prices for particular orders.

The whole thing may sound too simple to be true; but this is a system in use, for which substantial advantages are claimed. Indeed, product analysis pricing can show the way towards the achievement of the management accountant's ideal system under which effective functional control of expense is matched by equally effective and compatible pricing methods. There is, as the authors admit, more work to be done – especially in the use of product analysis pricing for the valuation of stock and work in progress. But a critical and forward-looking profession should be grateful to two non-accountants for putting their ideas into writing so promptly.

The authors are also to be congratulated on producing a reasonable book despite the need to create some new terminology; there is only one obvious irritation, which is caused by the frequent use of a word, probably an unnecessary piece of jargon, which is spelt '*dys*functional' in seven places including the index, but 'disfunctional' elsewhere.

The book is stimulating, challenging and often successfully critical of existing costing techniques. It is unlikely to abolish all current unit costing schemes overnight, but it may undermine some, while in other cases it may lead separately to the first bit of logic in price fixing seen for many years.

Statistics

Thirteenth edition, by A. R. ILERSIC, M.SC.(ECON.), B.COM., F.I.S. (H.F.L. (Publishers) Ltd, London. 36*s*.)

The first eleven editions of this book were published under the title of Statistics and Their Application to Commerce with the late Mr A. Lester Boddington as author. The twelfth edition undertaken by the present author and issued in 1959 had, however, very little direct connection with earlier ones and constituted, in fact, what was virtually a new work. This thirteenth edition has again been substantially revised and enlarged, and the chapters on social and economic statistics brought up to date by the inclusion of material relating to 1962 or 1963.

There is no doubt that this edition provides a good introduction to the study and it is a most valuable addition to the growing stock of beginners' textbooks on statistics. It is carefully written and well produced, and within the limits set by the author, every aspect discussed is adequately and competently dealt with.

The author claims that it covers the syllabuses of the various professional bodies which set papers in elementary statistical methods, and that students working for London external degrees in social sciences will find the chapters on current statistics of value. It can be said that Statistics more than justifies this claim, but one cannot avoid the feeling that whereas so comprehensive a book is well worth the price quoted (36*s*), the requirements of professional students can be met by each of a number of more limited, and consequently less expensive, publications.

SHORTER NOTICES

REGISTERS AND RECORDS: SOURCES OF INFORMATION, by Trevor M. Aldridge, M.A.(CANTAB.), Solicitor. (Oyez Publications, London. 15*s* net.) This is No. 49 in the well-known series of Oyez Practice Notes – a series described as being designed to provide practical assistance to the legal profession in dealing with questions which frequently arise, the answers to which are not otherwise readily accessible. This description is peculiarly apt in the case of the present volume, though the assistance it provides is not confined to the legal profession, but can be of considerable value to other professions, including accountancy, not to mention the mere layman. Indeed, anyone with fifteen shillings to spare would certainly do well to keep this volume on his shelves, for it indicates where to obtain information about a vast number of subjects – births, marriages and deaths; divorces; medical records; probates; bankruptcy and the like; ownership or real property; trade-marks and charities, to mention but a few.

THE SUBSTANCE OF ECONOMICS FOR THE STUDENT AND THE GENERAL READER, sixteenth edition, by H. A. Silverman. (Sir Isaac Pitman & Sons Ltd, London. 25*s* net.) This standard textbook, which has served several generations of students of economics, has been substantially revised. The result is a neat and compact work which is eminently suited to the student taking this subject in his professional examination. The descriptive and analytical material are well covered, albeit rather briefly. But as an introduction to the subject the revised edition will serve students' needs. It should, however, be supplemented by further reading.

Particular Merit

THE accounts of the Gas Purification & Chemical Co Ltd, which are the subject of this week's reprint, already go a long way towards meeting the new requirements and recommendations of the Stock Exchange. Of particular merit are the 'Trading analysis' and 'Movement of funds' which are praiseworthy efforts at setting out the figures in an easily understandable form. The 'Comparative summary' shows the salient points of sales, profits and other main items on a ten-year basis.

But Gas Purification & Chemical Co now has nothing to do with gas purifying or with chemicals. It is an industrial holding group whose ten principal subsidiaries cover electronic components and equipment, metal shearing and stocking, fractional horsepower motors, engineering design, woodworking, plastic moulding, decorative glass and, in particular, the distribution of tape recorders, dictating machines, radios, television and radiograms. In the latter field, the Grundig (Great Britain) subsidiary is the sole concessionaire for Great Britain of Grundig GmbH, of Germany.

It is in the absence of any breakdown of sales and earnings between the various subsidiaries and divisions of the group that the group, as an industrial holding company, does not meet the Stock Exchange requirements.

Not in Agreement

Mr Joseph Green, the chairman, says, in his statement with the accounts, that he does not necessarily agree with the Stock Exchange recommendations. He feels that they may not all be in the interests of the group. But he adds that the board 'will in future give all such information as is considered fair and reasonable provided always the group's interests are not prejudiced in any way'.

In the present accounts, however, there is an indication of the profits of one particular subsidiary, A.B. Metal Products Ltd. Since the bulk of A.B. Metal's production is sold direct to competitors of certain companies within the group, the full growth potential of both A.B. Metal and the group, it is considered, can only be achieved if the former has a separate quotation for its shares and a board which is not under the control of Gas Purification.

A separate Stock Exchange quotation for A.B. Metal shares is being arranged and shares in the company are to be distributed to Gas Purification shareholders in proportion to their shareholdings. The allotment of shares free of all expenses will rank as a distribution out of share premium account.

Earnings Forecast

This operation will obviously take earnings out of Gas Purification; and Mr Green states that A.B. Metal's profits in the year to June 30th were £304,200. After eliminating those profits, he anticipates that Gas Purification's current-year profits should not be less than £½ million and if that forecast is achieved – and it must be a tentative forecast at this stage – the board's intention would be to recommend a 15 per cent dividend.

Clearly the directors are budgeting for a considerable increase in current-year earnings from the remainder of the group compared with the year under review. As the ten-year record shows, the group's earnings record has been uneven in past years but, in the past two years in particular, there has been reflected a considerable degree of internal reorganization and redevelopment which has been successfully undertaken.

The A.B. Metals scheme would appear to complete the reorganization process, and Mr Green indicates the possibilities of fresh expansion by stating that the directors 'will continue to look for any acquisitions which will widen the group's activities and enhance its future prosperity'.

Interim Problem

IN an interim report stating that half-year profits show an increase compared with the same period the previous year, the directors of the Express Dairy Co Ltd add that they are in agreement in principle with the wishes of the Stock Exchange for the publication of interim reports. But the directors consider that there are certain factors peculiar to the dairy industry that make it necessary to give very careful consideration to the publication of such information to avoid it being misleading.

A number of factors affecting the farming industry with which the dairy industry is closely connected must also be taken into consideration. Even so, the Express Dairy directors hope that a way may be found to present an interim report next year in a manner that will prove helpful.

Farming subsidies and permitted margins to the dairy industry undoubtedly make for complications, but if the directors can state that half-year profits show an increase compared with the corresponding half of last year, why cannot figures be announced? There may be problems but the figures are there none the less.

CITY NOTES

THE gold flurry having been nipped in the bud by the firm statement on United States gold price policy, the stock-markets have temporarily lost one of their few points of interest. For a short period industrial equities benefited from the downturn in gold shares but the better tone did not last.

There is still no sure basis for new industrial equity support even though 1964 results are helping to put a temporary peg in prices around current levels. The thinness of current market conditions and the attempts of jobbers not to carry any positions was shown in the gyrations in bank shares immediately before and after the dividend announcement by four of the Big Five banks.

Westminster having opened the bank dividend season with a substantial profit rise and an unexpectedly heavy increase in dividend, bank share jobbers hoisted prices of the shares of the other four banks mainly as a defensive measure. But prices proved to have been hoisted too far and they finished, on the day of the four announcements, at levels below those ruling at the opening of the market.

Any true flow of business one way or the other would have marked effect on share prices generally. But for the present there seems little prospect of any real volume developing.

* * * *

FOLLOWING forecasts of a rush of pre-Budget mergers in industry, the City found the first major merger of the year right on its own doorstep. Philip Hill, Higginson, Erlangers and M. Samuel are joining forces to form a combined merchant banking organization which will rival the position of Hambros Bank as the biggest merchant banking organization in the City.

The disclosed assets involved in the merger amount to some £162 million but the share exchange terms, through which the merger will be effected, will turn on the measurement of the internal reserves of the two organizations. M. Samuel will, through an exchange of shares, buy the capital of Philip Hill from Philip Hill Investment Trust and will become Hill, Samuel.

The Trust will distribute Hill, Samuel shares to its shareholders to an extent which will leave the Samuel family and the Trust as equal shareholders in Hill, Samuel.

HAVING failed to bring off new capital negotiations with Mr Leonard Matchan, the directors of Theo. Garvin Ltd, the Essex finance company, requested suspension of dealings in the company's shares on the Stock Exchange. The company's capital position has been aggravated by 7 per cent Bank rate but it has been stated that further discussions are taking place with a view to raising new finance. If these are successful voluntary liquidation will be avoided. Depositors' funds are stated to be intact.

DURING last November, hire-purchase debt rose £13 million to a new peak of £1,107 million – an increase of £160 million on November 1963. The chairmen of two leading finance companies – Mercantile Credit and Bowmaker – have both recently reported marked expansion in business in the final three months of 1964.

Hire-purchase finance company shares, however, stand on a high yield basis because of the effect on profits of increased money costs stemming from 7 per cent Bank rate. Sir Mark Turner, chairman of Mercantile Credit, has forecast considerably higher profits for 1964–65 before interest charges, but lower pre-tax earnings.

Accountants' Fees for Gains Tax Computations

SIR, – I was glad to see from your issue of December 12th that the Council of The Institute of Chartered Accountants in England and Wales has now published their exchanges with the Board of Inland Revenue on the subject of the allowance of accountancy fees in short-term gains computations. Your readers who are not already aware of this problem will no doubt feel that this discloses a typically small-minded attitude on the part of the Inland Revenue.

However, the important problem now is what will be the position when the new full-scale capital gains tax which the Chancellor has promised to introduce is in operation. It is obvious that this tax will be of great complication and will cause considerable extra work to fall on the accountancy profession. As far as the clients are concerned their actual capital profits are going to be reduced by the fees they have to pay to get these computed and in equity the fees should be a deduction in computing the gains liability. I think your readers will agree that the Council's efforts should now be directed to obtaining an assurance from the Board of Inland Revenue that accountants' fees will be allowed in the new capital gains tax computations and, if the Board take the view that this is not possible in the context of existing legislation, they should be pressed to include the appropriate clauses in the Finance Bill next April. My feeling is that in connection with these representations the Council should point out to the Board, and also make sure that the Chancellor is personally aware of the position, that the collection of taxes in this country is largely dependent on co-operation between the profession and the Inland Revenue. If, as a result of the adoption of an unrealistic attitude towards the allowance of our fees, the profession chooses to adopt an unco-operative attitude the administration of the tax system may well break down, particularly in view of the fact that the Inland Revenue is already overstrained and the proposed changes in the tax system are going to mean a greatly increased burden of work over the next few years. One simple way of transferring a considerable burden of work from the profession to the Revenue would be instead of producing a statement of capital gains to submit a client's bundle of contract notes for the year, together with a list of the client's investments at valuation day 1965, and ask the Inland Revenue to produce the computation which the accountant would then check. More drastic methods are obviously available such as, for example, allowing a large number of cases to go forward for personal hearing before the Commissioners at which hearing the comprehensive figures could be produced for the first time.

One does not like to have to advocate drastic action of this nature but if the Board and the Chancellor intend to be obstinate I see no reason why the profession should not use its power. Finally, I would remind your readers that certain assurances have been given by the Chancellor that the gains tax would be on American lines and that accountants' fees for the computation of gains, and indeed in respect of other income, are allowable in the United States.

Yours faithfully,

H. G. POWYS GREENWOOD, F.C.A.

Corporation Tax

SIR, – I observe that the fourth of the articles on the Corporation Tax (December 26th issue), in referring to director-controlled companies, makes no mention of the profits tax restriction on the amounts chargeable for directors' remuneration.

It would be interesting to know whether your contributor envisages:

(a) complete disallowance of remuneration in excess of the present limits;

(b) disallowance of such a proportion of the excess as would give rise to a liability equal to the present 15 per cent (e.g., a 40 per cent disallowance if Corporation Tax is at 37½ per cent).

Yours faithfully,

Ilford, Essex. D. W. POYNER, A.C.A.

[Our contributor comments:

(a) It would be over-optimistic not to envisage the disallowance of directors' remuneration in excess of some limits. The present limits, however, were fixed by section 33 of the Finance Act, 1959, and, with inflation taking place at the rate of 3½ per cent annually, a case could be made out for an upward adjustment of the limits by some 21 per cent (see also page 9, January 2nd issue).

(b) The Chancellor's statement of December 8th, 1964, makes no reference to directors' remuneration and one guess could be as good as another.

(c) No disallowance would seem to be extremely unlikely. It could even be that the limits will be applied to all controlled companies, whether director-controlled or not, but excepting whole-time service directors.]

Waiting for the Accounts

SIR, – A few years ago we lost to one of the largest firms of accountants in the country a valued client for whom we had acted for twenty years.

Our reply to the authorities who made a recent request for a certified copy of the accounts for the last financial year read as follows:

> 'How we wish your communication of December 22nd, 1964, really applied to us. Unhappily, a take-over bid in 1960 denied us the opportunity of continuing to act for our valued clients. It is no consolation to us to know that during the twenty years we did act as auditors never were we so hopelessly late in furnishing certified accounts to you.
> 'We hope you meet with success in your request'.

Is there a moral here somewhere?

Yours faithfully,

London EC2. ALBERT V. HUSSEY & CO.

Tax Treatment of Allowance on 'Traded-in' Vehicle

SIR, – I shall be grateful for views on the following point.

A greengrocer taxed under Schedule D, Case I, wished to purchase a new vehicle for use in his business and by chance, at the time he was going to make the transaction, a friend who was anxious to dispose of his car, asking £380 for it, suggested that the greengrocer should offer it in part exchange and stated that he would be satisfied with his asking price and that the greengrocer could have the benefit of any profit. The garage selling the new car to the greengrocer gave an allowance of £450 for the friend's car. The greengrocer then gave the friend a cheque for £380 to complete the matter.

The tax office hold the view that the transaction was an adventure or concern in the nature of trade and that the profit of £70 is assessable on the greengrocer, or alternatively, that an excessive allowance was given by the garage on the old car in the nature of a discount on the new one.

There is no reason to suppose that the garage gave an excessive allowance on the old car in the nature of a discount on the new one. The allowance given was the normal one.

Is it considered that the £70 is properly assessable, and if so would an employed person completing a similar transaction be assessable? Alternatively, would readers agree that the £70 should not be assessed but that it should be regarded as a discount on the new vehicle and thus effectively taxed by restriction of the capital allowances?

Yours faithfully,

Bristol. P. M. BUTTERFIELD.

[It is assumed that the documents support the view that the garage charged the full list price for the new car and made an allowance of £450 for the old one. In this event the greengrocer incurred expenditure equal to the cost of the new vehicle and is entitled to appropriate capital allowances computed on this figure.

It is considered that in the circumstances of this case there was no adventure in the nature of trade, the profits of which can be assessed under Case I of Schedule D. The car was not a fixed asset of the greengrocer's business and it is not suggested that the greengrocer had had previous transactions in buying and selling vehicles which could establish that he was dealing therein.

If the car was purchased with the intention of its employment in the greengrocer's business and was disposed of without its being employed therein, liability could arise under Case VII of Schedule D as the car would then be a chargeable asset by virtue of section 11 (2) (c), Finance Act, 1962, but the 'gain' would not otherwise fall under Case VII. – Editor.]

E.D.P. in Local Government

SIR, – I was interested in the article – 'E.D.P. and Management Information in Local Government' – in your issue of January 2nd. Experience seems to suggest that systems analysts and programmers should not be divided into two sections but should work together as one team; in fact, the emphasis would be on systems analysis work in the beginning, but later the emphasis would change to programming and it is difficult to see how a hard and fast division could work effectively.

The alternative pattern of organization suggested in the notes to the diagram in the article whereby the systems analysts and programmers would work together under the City Treasurer's computer manager would therefore seem to be preferable.

Yours faithfully,

COMPUTER MANAGER.

Assessment of Profits

SIR, – A builder built three properties, in 1955, 1956 and 1958 which were treated as capital assets at the cost of construction in his accounts as they were all let and he intended to keep them for the rental income.

The rents received were included in the business accounts and assessed under Schedule D, Case I.

In 1960, the builder was short of capital which necessitated the sale of the properties built in 1955 and 1956. In 1961 he again needed capital and sold the property built in 1958.

The Revenue seek to assess the profits made.

The profits made are partly due to the normal profit a builder would expect to make on a sale and partly to rising property prices during the periods that the properties were used as, and accepted as, capital assets.

Should the builder in these circumstances be assessed on the profits made? If so, wholly or partly? These are the only sales to date but other properties have been erected and are still owned.

Yours faithfully,

Alveston, Bristol. S. KINKEAD.

C.I.R. v. Park Investments Ltd

In the High Court of Justice (Chancery Division)
December 16th, 1964
(Before Mr Justice BUCKLEY)

Surtax – Company – Treatment of several persons as one person – Whether public substantially interested – Income Tax Act, 1952, sections 245, 256, 257.

The respondent company's capital during the relevant period consisted of 137,514 shares of 5*s* each, and these shares were bought by two brothers and members of their families and relations of theirs. The issued capital was later increased to 957,514 shares. During the relevant period the shares were held as to 54·21 per cent by the two brothers and five other brothers and sisters of theirs, 11·89 per cent was held by the spouses of the seven brothers and sisters; and 31·73 per cent was held by the trustees of five family settlements. The trustees were, in the case of one settlement, one of the two brothers and a third brother, and in the case of the other four settlements were the other of the two brothers and the same third brother. The shares were registered in the name of a bank's nominee company. The remaining 2·15 per cent of the shares was held outside the family. The shares were all of one class and they carried equal voting rights.

Surtax directions under section 245 of the Income Tax Act, 1952, for accounting periods ended July 31st, 1955, to July 31st, 1959, were made on the appellant company.

It was contended on behalf of the appellants that, by virtue of section 256 (3) of the Income Tax Act, 1952, the three brothers and the sisters had to be treated as one person; that that one person then held beneficially 54·21 per cent of the issued shares and also another 31·73 per cent represented by the settled shares, that is to say, 85·94 per cent; and that, therefore, 25 per cent of the voting power in the company could not be held by the public; alternatively, that it was open to the Inland Revenue to choose five notional persons whom it would treat as controlling the company, and could do so in the way most favourable to the Revenue; and that, as the shareholders were relatives of one another, there was no one who could properly be described as a member of the public.

It was contended by the respondent that if one or more persons not exceeding five hold more than 50 per cent of the voting rights in the company, that person or those persons control the company, and that all the other shareholders were members of the public for the purpose of section 256 (3); and that the choice contended for by the appellants was not available. The Special Commissioners decided in favour of the respondent.

Held: the 31·73 per cent of the shares, held by the trustees, were not held as shares for members of the public, as the trustees were among those who had to be regarded as controlling the company; that therefore more than 75 per cent of the issued shares were held by five or fewer persons, who controlled the company; and that therefore there could not be as much as 25 per cent of the voting rights left to be held by the public.

Woodrow's Executor v. Whalley

In the High Court of Justice (Chancery Division)
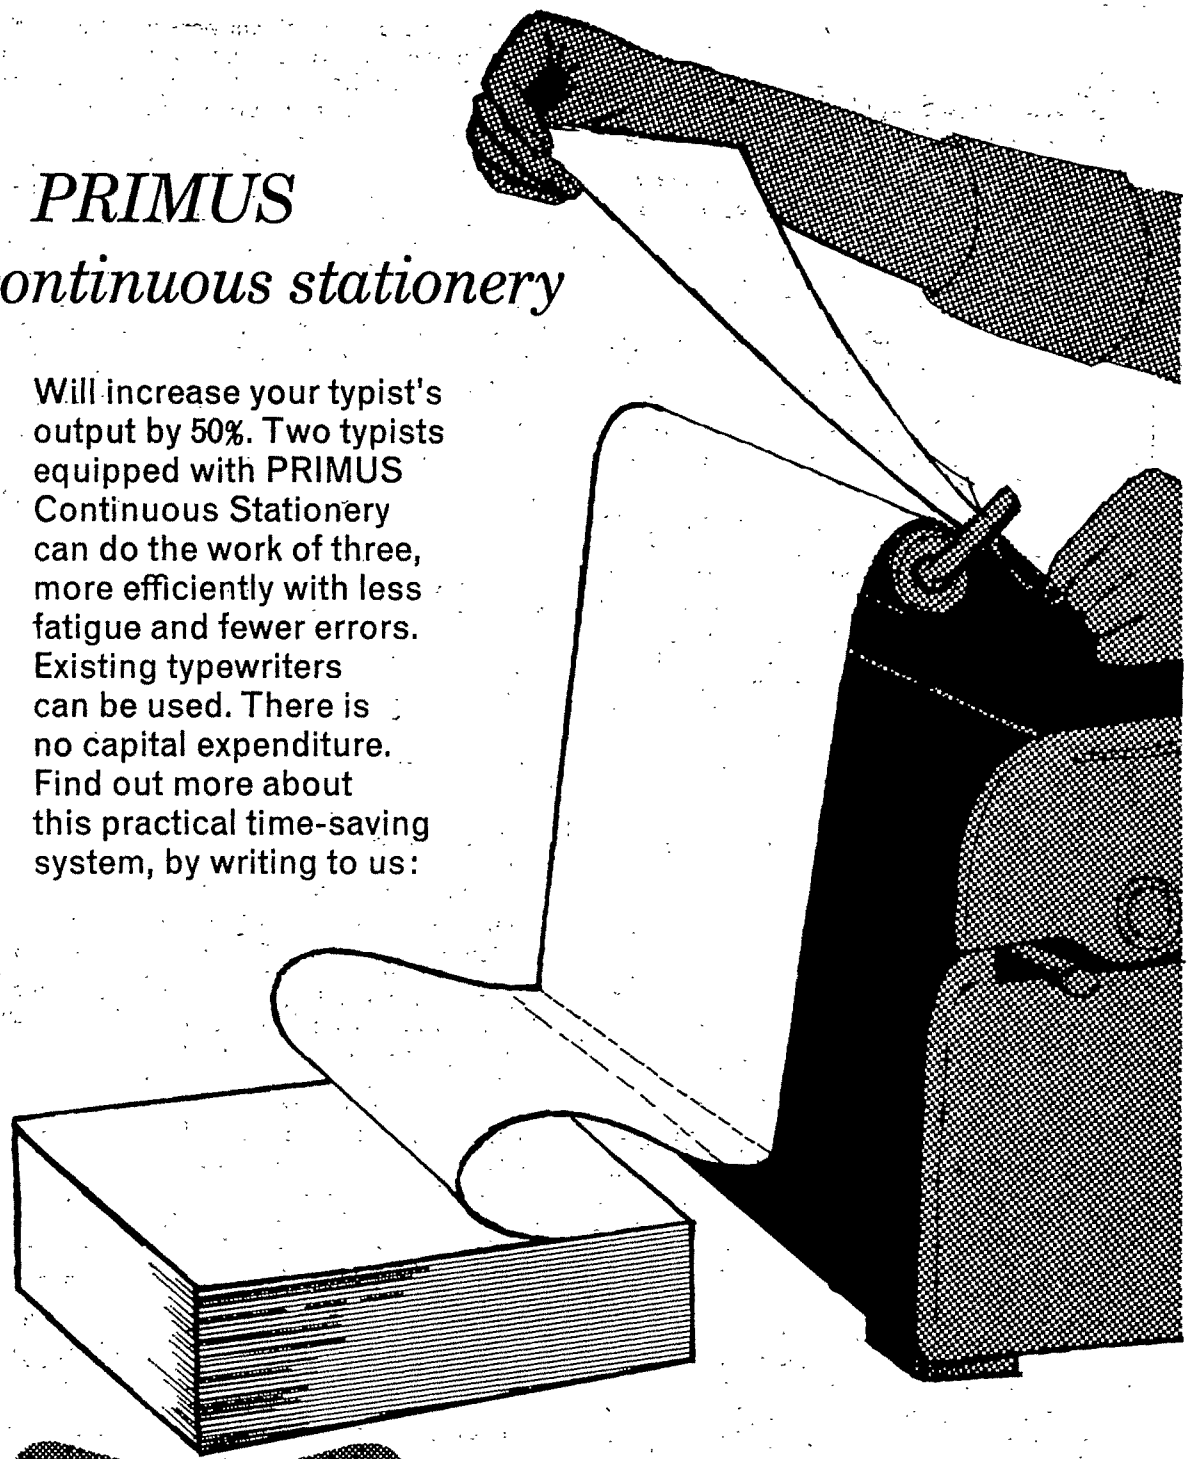
(Before Mr Justice BUCKLEY)

Income tax – Farmer – Understatement of profits – Assessment of executor – Whether additional assessments competent – Whether certain sums includible – Income Tax Act, 1952, sections 41, 47.



The deceased carried on a farming business, and he also had small amounts of untaxed interest. As a result of inquiries the Inspector of Taxes decided to cause additional assessments to be made on the deceased for 1946–47 to 1955–56. In 1948 and 1951 respectively, amounts of £700 and £512 10*s* were credited to a deposit account in the name of the deceased's wife, and before the General Commissioners there was a letter from the accountants saying that the £700 represented defence bonds purchased in her name in 1941 and redeemed in 1948; and that the £512 10*s* was derived from the sale of national savings certificates that had been bought by the wife in 1940.

It was contended on behalf of the appellant that there had been no discovery within section 41 (1) of the Income Tax Act, 1952; that therefore the additional assessments were incompetent; that as those assessments had been made more than six years after the years of assessment, they were outside the time limit, unless the Crown could prove that the deceased had been guilty of fraud or wilful default; and that on the evidence the £700 and £512 10*s* should be excluded from the computations for the relevant years of assessment. It was contended on behalf of the respondent that there had been a discovery within section 41 (1); that on the facts found by the General Commissioners there had been wilful default on the part of the deceased; and that the £700 and £512 10*s* had been properly included in the computations.

Held: there had been a discovery when the deceased had admitted to the Inspector that his earlier returns were erroneous; that on the evidence wilful default on the part of the deceased had been established; but that the £700 and £512 10*s* should be excluded from the assessments for 1949–50 and 1952–53 respectively.

December 21st, 1964

(Before Mr Justice BUCKLEY)

Income tax – Dissolution of partnership – Whether assessments made in time – Income Tax Act, 1952, sections 47 (1), 53, 122 (Schedule D, Case I), sections 144, 365 (4) – Finance Act, 1960, sections 51, 53, 63 (3), 79.

The deceased, who died on December 17th, 1957, had for many years carried on, in partnership with his brother, the trade of dairymen. The partnership was dissolved by the death of the brother. In 1962, more than four years after the deceased's death, additional assessments were made, and they were for the years 1941–42 to 1947–48. There was never a partnership between the brother and the deceased's executors.

The deceased's executors appealed against the assessments; and the preliminary point was taken that the assessments were all bad, because the deceased had died more than three years before the day when they were made, and that they were bad even if fraud or wilful default or neglect was established.

It was contended on behalf of the appellant that the assessment was on a partnership and had therefore to be made in the partnership name; and that the assessments were not barred by lapse of time; alternatively, that assuming that 1948–49 was a normal year within section 51 of the Finance Act, 1960, the Revenue could go back as far as 1942–43 in making additional assessments, and that section 63 (3) of the same Act, directing that a partnership assessment should be deemed to be an assessment on the partners, does not constitute such an actual assessment on any partner; and that therefore it did not make section 53 of the same Act, prescribing a time limit on assessments on personal representatives, applicable to assessments on a partnership, one partner of which had died.

For the respondent it was contended that there never was a partnership between the surviving brother and his brother's executors; and that section 51 of the Finance Act, 1960, had to be read in conjunction with section 63 (3), so that the assessments had to be treated as assessments on the partners, and were barred by section 53. It was also contended for the respondents that section 47 of the 1952 Act did not confer a power to assess personal representatives more than six years after the end of the year of assessment or more than three years after the assessment year in which the deceased died even if fraud or wilful default was established; and that even if an assessment could be raised under the proviso to section 47 (1) on the ground of fraud or wilful default, the assessment was still subject to section 53 of the 1960 Act read in conjunction with section 63 (3) thereof. The Special Commissioners decided in favour of the respondents.

Held: an assessment under section 144 of the 1952 Act was an assessment on the partners as individuals jointly; that section 47 (2) provided that in no case, whether one of fraud or wilful default or not, could an assessment be made on personal representatives later than the end of the third year next following the assessment year in which the deceased died; and that therefore the assessments, having been made in 1962, were invalid against the executors on that ground; and that the decision of the Special Commissioners was correct.

Hale v. Shea

In the High Court of Justice (Chancery Division)

(Before Mr Justice BUCKLEY)

Income tax – Partnership – Sale of share to continuing partner – Giving advice and assistance – Payment to outgoing partner – Whether earned income – Income Tax Act, 1952, sections 123 (Case VI), 525 (1).

On March 25th, 1957, an agreement was made between the appellant and his partner reciting that they had carried on in partnership the practice of solicitors; that they were entitled to the partnership assets in equal shares; and that it had been agreed that the appellant should retire from the partnership as from February 29th, 1956. By clause 4 the continuing partner was bound to pay to the appellant, as from March 1st, 1956, for fifteen years, one-fourth of the net profits of the practice, and was to do so half-yearly, and income tax was to be deducted from the half-yearly instalments. In consideration of these payments the appellant was, at the request of the continuing partner, to advise him and render such assistance to him in connection with the practice as he should reasonably require during the fifteen years. If the appellant should die during the fifteen years the continuing partner was to pay his widow an annuity of £400 a year for the remainder of the fifteen-year period.

An assessment for 1961–62, under Case VI of Schedule D, was made on the appellant in the sum of £3,000 in respect of a payment made to him by the continuing partner pursuant to clause 4 of the agreement. The appellant contended that the £3,000 was earned income, in that it arose solely from the giving of advice and assistance to the continuing partner under clause 4. It was contended for the respondent that the £3,000 was not received by the appellant solely in consideration of giving advice and assistance to the continuing partner but was consideration for the transfer to the latter of the partnership assets as well as for the services to be rendered under clause 4. The General Commissioners decided in favour of the respondent.

Held: the General Commissioners' decision was correct.

THE INSTITUTE OF CHARTERED ACCOUNTANTS IN ENGLAND AND WALES

SPECIAL AND ORDINARY MEETINGS OF THE COUNCIL

Macdonald, D.F.C., J. H. Mann, M.B.E., D. S. Morpeth, W. Bertram Nelson, C.B.E., W. E. Parker, C.B.E., S. J. Pears, F. E. Price, L. W. Robson, Sir Thomas Robson, M.B.E., Messrs J. D. Russell, R. G. Slack, D. Steele, A. H. Walton, R. Walton, F. J. Weeks, E. F. G. Whinney, J. C. Montgomery Williams, R. P. Winter, C.B.E., M.C., T.D.

The late Sir Nicholas Edwin Waterhouse K.B.E., M.A., F.C.A.

The Council received with much regret notice of the death of Sir Nicholas Edwin Waterhouse, K.B.E., M.A., F.C.A., Effingham, Surrey, a member of the Council from 1915 to 1956 and President for the year 1928–29.

Election to the Council

Mr John Vernon Eastwood, F.C.A., Manchester, was elected a member of the Council to fill the vacancy caused by the resignation of Mr Mark Wheatley Jones, B.COM., F.C.A.

Appointment to Committees

Mr D. S. Morpeth, B.COM., F.C.A., was appointed to serve on the Articled Clerks' Committee, the Education Committee and the Parliamentary and Law Committee.

Management Consulting Services Information Bureau

The following statement was approved for publication:

'The Council has been informed that the British Institute of Management in conjunction with the Federation of British Industries has formed, with effect from January 1st, 1965, a Management Consulting Services Information Bureau. The British Institute of Management register of management and industrial consultants to which reference is made in section E3, paragraph 74 (which should now be regarded as cancelled) of the Members' Handbook, has been discontinued.

'Members, including those in practice, are advised that there is no ethical reason why they should not supply information to the Bureau regarding the services which they can offer in the consultancy field.'

Company Law Amendment

The Council approved for submission to the President of the Board of Trade a memorandum on Company Law Amendment.

Summer Courses

The Council authorized the distribution to all members of a notice giving preliminary details of the summer courses to be held at Christ Church and Merton College, Oxford, from July 15th to 20th, and Emmanuel College, Cambridge, from September 15th to 19th.

The subjects and speakers at the Oxford course will be:

'Professional ethics': Mr C. Croxton-Smith, M.A., LL.B., F.C.A. (Watling & Partners), member of the Council and Vice-Chairman of the Investigation Committee.

'Assessing the profitability of future capital projects': Mr J. K. Steward, C.A. (Finance Director, Mond Division, Imperial Chemical Industries Ltd).

'The Budget 1965 – proposed changes': Mr K. H. Oates, F.C.A. (Viney, Price & Goodyear).

It is hoped that there will be informal talks on Sunday by:

(a) Mr H. C. Treffers, President of the Union Européenne des Experts Comptables Economiques et Financiers; and (b) a member of the Board of Inland Revenue.

The subjects and speakers at the Cambridge course will be:

'Group accounts – their preparation and presentation and the responsibilities of directors and auditors in this connection': Mr J. D. Russell, M.A., F.C.A. (Binder, Hamlyn & Co), member of the Council.

'Mergers and associations of professional firms': Mr H. T. Nicholson, F.C.A. (Harmood Banner, Cash, Stone & Mounsey).

'The chartered accountant in top management': Mr E. P. J. Lunch, F.C.A. (Chief Accountant, Port of London Authority).

There will be an informal talk by Mr John Love, F.C.A., President of The Institute of Chartered Accountants in Ireland.

E.D.P. Courses

The Council authorized the distribution to all members in mid-February of a notice giving details of a further series of E.D.P. introductory courses to be held at the Hotel Metropole, Brighton, from May 3rd to 12th, 1965.

Future Courses

It was reported to the Council that, in order to assess the demand, all members would be asked in mid-February to notify the Secretary on a special questionnaire to what extent they would be interested in instructional courses run by the Institute, whether they had any preference as to location and timing, whether they would be prepared to lecture to members or articled clerks and whether they proposed to sit for The Certificate in Management Information.

Business Sessions

The Council authorized the distribution to all members of a notice giving details of the business sessions to be held after the annual meeting on May 12th, 1965. The subjects and speakers will be:

'The recent recommendations of the Stock Exchange in relation to the accounts of public companies': Mr W. S. Wareham (Secretary of the Share and Loan Department of the Stock Exchange, London). Mr R. G. Leach, C.B.E., F.C.A. (Peat, Marwick, Mitchell & Co), member of the Council. Mr H. Hodgson, F.C.A. (Comptroller, Fisons Ltd).

'The Budget': Mr A. R. Ilersic, B.COM., M.SC. (Reader in Economics and Social Statistics, University of London). Mr D. S. Morpeth, B.COM., F.C.A. (Touche, Ross, Bailey & Smart), member of the Council. Mr S. Kitchen, F.C.A. (Foster & Stephens).

'Practice administration': Mr E. K. Wright, M.A., F.C.A. (Annan, Dexter & Co), member of the Council. Mr D. Steele, F.C.A. (Williamson, Butterfield & Roberts), member of the Council.

Chartered Accountants Employees Superannuation Scheme (CAESS)

The Council authorized execution of a deed amending CAESS in accordance with the wishes of the CAESS Committee so as to extend the scheme to the staffs of service and similar companies linked with members' practices and also to the staffs of district, branch and students' societies.

Meeting between Representatives of District Societies and of the Council

It was reported that the annual meeting between representatives of district societies and of the Council would be held on November 4th, 1965.

York Branch
Lincoln and South Lincolnshire Branch

The Council has approved that the York Group (of The Leeds, Bradford and District Society of Chartered Accountants) and the Lincoln and South Lincolnshire Group (of The Hull, East Yorkshire and Lincolnshire Society of Chartered Accountants) be constituted branches of their respective district societies from January 1st, 1965.

The Education and Training of Articled Clerks

Study Conference Report

The Council noted that a report had been prepared on the study conference held last July at The Further Education Staff College, Blagdon, near Bristol. The conference, sponsored jointly by the Institute and the Staff College, had as its theme the education and training of articled clerks with particular reference to the introductory and other courses of oral tuition for articled clerks which the Institute was at present promoting in collaboration with colleges of further education and other institutions.

The report, which is printed in booklet form, records in some detail the main conclusions emerging from the conference. Copies of the report, price 5s each post free, are obtainable from the Institute.

Study Leave – New Final Examination

The Council decided that the following statement should be published and drawn to the attention of district and students' societies:

'The Council has been legally advised that the study leave provisions in articles signed before November 27th, 1963, give rise to an anomaly in that a clerk who attempts on separate occasions the two parts of the new Final examination is entitled to a minimum of one month's full-time leave before he sits for each part; whereas a clerk who attempts both parts together is strictly entitled to a minimum of one month's full-time leave only before the examination.

'In the opinion of the Council, it is undesirable that entitlement to study leave shall differ according to the manner in which a clerk presents himself for examination. The Council therefore recommends that clerks articled before November 27th 1963 shall be granted, as a minimum, pre-examination leave at the rate of four weeks in respect of each part of the Final examination, whether the parts are taken separately or together.

'Articles entered into on or after November 27th 1963 provide expressly for leave on the basis recommended above.'

Annual Meeting with U.C.A.S.S. Liaison Committee

The Council decided that the annual meeting between members of the Council and the liaison committee of the Union of Chartered Accountant Students' Societies be held in 1965 on March 2nd.

The Council nominated seven members of the Council to attend.

Overseas Accountancy Examinations Advisory Board

The Council approved the following statement for publication:

'In order to ensure that its examinations will be of a high standard and will command wide recognition, The Institute of Chartered Accountants (Ghana) has entered into an arrangement in connection with the examinations it will conduct whereby it will receive the advice and assistance of the Overseas Accountancy Examinations Advisory Board established by the Chartered Accountants Joint Standing Committee of The Institute of Chartered Accountants in England and Wales, The Institute of Chartered Accountants of Scotland and The Institute of Chartered Accountants in Ireland.'

Registration of Articles

The Secretary reported the registration of 843 articles of clerkship during November, the total number since January 1st, 1964, being 3,299.

Admissions to Membership

The following were admitted to membership of the Institute:

Harrison, John Trevor, B.A., A.C.A., *a*1965; 7 Wymond Street, London SW15.

Mr C. H. S. Loveday, F.C.A.

The retirement of Mr C. H. S. Loveday, F.C.A., an Under-Secretary of the Institute, with effect from January 1st, 1965, was reported to the Council.

The Council placed on record its appreciation of Mr Loveday's service to the Institute over a period of twenty-nine years.

Mr Loveday will continue as Secretary of The Chartered Accountants' Benevolent Association.

FINDINGS AND DECISIONS OF THE DISCIPLINARY COMMITTEE

Finding and Decision of the Disciplinary Committee of the Council of the Institute at a hearing held on November 12th, 1964.

A formal complaint was preferred by the Investigation Committee of the Council of the Institute to the Disciplinary Committee of the Council that a clerk, while under articles to a Fellow of The Institute of Chartered Accountants in England and Wales, had been guilty of acts or defaults namely that during the period of his service (i) he engaged in a business or occupation without obtaining the permission of his principal or of the Council of the Institute as required under the bye-laws of the Institute and (ii) he held himself out as being engaged in the businesses or occupations of Accountants and Auditors, Business Consultants, Property and Land Agents, so as to render himself liable to be declared unfit to become a member of the Institute. The Committee found that the formal complaint had been proved under both headings and the Committee ordered that the former articled clerk be reprimanded but considered that there existed special circumstances justifying the omission of his name from the publication of the Finding and Decision.

Findings and Decisions of the Disciplinary Committee of the Council at hearings held on December 2nd, 1964.

A formal complaint was preferred by the Investigation Committee of the Council of the Institute to the Disciplinary Committee of the Council that Percival Henry Jackman, F.C.A., was at the Brentford Magistrates' Court on June 10th, 1964, convicted of (a) a charge that being the liquidator of a limited company he failed to call a general meeting of the said company contrary to section 300 of the Companies Act, 1948; (b) a charge that being the liquidator of the said company he failed to call a meeting of creditors of the said company contrary to section 300 of the Companies Act, 1948, and was fined £25 on each charge, so as to render himself liable to exclusion or suspension from membership of the Institute. The Committee found that the formal complaint against Percival Henry Jackman, F.C.A., had been proved under both headings and the Committee ordered that Percival Henry Jackman, F.C.A., of 16 Tennyson Avenue, Twickenham, Middlesex, be reprimanded.

A formal complaint was preferred by the Investigation Committee of the Council of the Institute to the Disciplinary Committee of the Council that Michael Anthony Stuart Brinkley, F.C.A., was by an Order dated August 5th, 1964, adjudicated bankrupt, so as to render himself liable to exclusion or suspension from membership of the Institute. The Committee found that the formal complaint against Michael Anthony Stuart Brinkley, F.C.A., had been proved and the Committee ordered that Michael Anthony Stuart Brinkley, F.C.A., of 85 Union Road, London SW4, be excluded from membership of the Institute.

SOME OFFICE ORGANIZATION POINTS

NOT every student of accounting is fortunate enough to be able to observe the workings of a commercial office at first hand. Much work must be done by a company's employees before the books of account are ruled off and balanced and the files of invoices and other vouchers laid before the auditing staff. It is desirable that the student should understand something of office organization and duties because these form an important part of the internal control system in the light of which the audit programme will be drawn up. Before he can properly consider the soundness of internal control he must know something of office methods and procedures generally, because if those in force at his client's offices are unsatisfactory, his detailed checking must perforce be extended.

Office Efficiency

Apart from considerations of internal check, it is desirable that the office should be efficiently conducted and in fact it is usually the case that efficiency (the carrying out of tasks in the shortest and most direct way) and sound internal control, go hand in hand. Office efficiency is not just a matter of providing a wealth of accounting machines, pegboard devices and other office aids. Rather does it depend upon good organization and management concerned, for example, to provide adequate staff responsible for specified duties and a steady flow of prime documents, delays and bottlenecks being rapidly brought to light and prompt action taken to remedy them. This will entail co-operation with the factory staff as most of the basic documents originate in the production or dispatch departments, and if slackness prevails on the system of documentation, delays will occur in the office whilst queries are referred back and cleared.

What is the 'Office'?

Students will be most familiar with the financial office or 'counting house' but he must remember that a manufacturing company will embrace other offices with which his contact will be less direct. However, most of the entries in the financial books will be initiated in such offices as the following:

(i) Wages office. – Here the all-important records of time worked and output achieved will be maintained as a basis for the subsequent computation of gross and net wages and the making up of the pay packets in the financial office itself.

(ii) Stores office. – This is concerned with the custody, issue and recording of stores held for the purpose of production.

(iii) Costs office. – As part of its duty of preparing data to enable the business to be guided and controlled by the management, this office will price and evaluate stores requisitions and maintain the stores and materials ledgers.

(iv) Order office. – Suppliers' invoices will relate to goods ordered by this office in accordance with the needs of the production department.

(v) Sales office. – Customers' orders will be received here and after pricing, invoice sets will be prepared, thus initiating the procedure of packing and dispatching the goods, invoicing the customer and providing the media for the posting of the sales ledger.

(vi) Production control office. – This office defines production methods, gives instructions for manufacture and controls its execution.

Incoming Mail

The receipt of the post is an important daily event. Arrangements must be made for it to be opened, sorted and passed to the appropriate departments as quickly as possible so that the necessary actions can be taken without delay. It is usual for the work to be done in the presence of a senior official whose duty it is to sort the matter received according to its nature. A classification might be as follows:

(i) Orders received. – These may require listing for statistical purposes before being passed to the credit control department for checking the credit worthiness of the customer.

(ii) Suppliers' invoices. – These will be listed and passed to the cost office where the goods received note and inspection certificate are attached, the prices verified with the copy order and the calculations checked.

(iii) Cash and cheques. – Cheques will be crossed with the name of the company's bankers and passed to the cashier for entry in the cash-book and prompt lodgement at the bank. It is desirable to enter receipts of actual coin and notes in a cash diary as prime evidence of receipt against which the cash-book entries can subsequently be checked.

(iv) Salesmen's reports, general correspondence, inquiries, etc. – These will be passed to the appropriate departmental head.

The Day's Work

The circulation of all routine documents should follow a consistent path which should be as direct as possible to avoid the delays which would occur if a person concerned did not complete the whole of his appointed task at the correct time in the prescribed sequence of operations. This is particularly important if full utilization of accounting machine time is to be achieved, as a delay in passing on a batch of documents for posting may mean that it reaches the accounting machine at a time when it is employed on other tasks.

The tracing of delays and bottlenecks is an important task for the office manager. Unless these are detected and remedied, it may be impossible to draw cheques at the due date or to send out the monthly statements promptly. This may result, in the first place, in an impairment of the company's credit standing and, in the second, in delays in the collection of amounts due from customers.

Credit Control

Before orders are sent forward for dispatch, it is important that they should be 'passed for credit', i.e. the credit worthiness of the potential purchaser should be established. This task is normally carried out by the cashier or, if the company is large, by a specially appointed clerk called the credit controller. The method of control used will depend upon the normal order size, the type of customer and other factors, but a typical procedure would be as follows:

(a) a 'credit limit' should be decided upon for each customer based on trade and bank references, salesmen's reports or inquiries from a mercantile agency. The limits should be noted on the head of the ledger account;

(b) orders from sources with which no previous business has been done should not be executed until satisfactory 'credit references' have been obtained from at least two other concerns with which the potential customers have previously done business. The credit limit will be based on the information supplied as to the amount of credit normally granted, regularity of payment, etc.;

(c) all orders should be checked against the approved credit limit, taking into account amounts already owing as shown by the ledger. If the execution of the order would result in the credit limit being exceeded it must be held back or the authority of a higher official obtained. It will be noted that for credit control to be fully effective, all ledger postings must be kept up to date;

(d) sales ledger accounts must be regularly scrutinized for arrears and a suitable follow-up letter dispatched to the debtor. If payment is not received, a further and more urgent application may be sent. If cash or a satisfactory explanation for the delay is still not forthcoming, consideration must be given to the question of passing the matter to the company's solicitors.

Correspondence Filing System

The benefits of an efficient filing system providing quick access to letters and other business records cannot be overestimated. This is not to imply that documents must be held indefinitely; storage space and filing equipment are expensive and the system of supervision should provide for the regular destruction of documents after a suitable lapse of time, depending on their nature. In considering a filing system the following matters must be borne in mind:

(i) Classification adopted. – This should be simple and consistently followed, e.g. alphabetical or by subject-matter. The benefits to be derived from centralized filing where all the company's correspondence is filed together, must be weighed against the convenience of a system in which each department maintains its own set of files.

(ii) Location of files. – A centralized system should be as near as possible to the departments which make use of the filed matter. The most frequently used files should be the most easily accessible.

(iii) Safety precautions. – Important documents, e.g. deeds and insurance policies, will require storage in fireproof safes or strong-rooms. Confidential files, e.g. salary records, must be kept under lock and key. Less important records may be filed in drawer cabinets or racks (lateral filing). Rack filing has much to commend it if space is short, as there is no need to provide wide gangways to allow for the cabinet drawers to be pulled out.

(iv) Duration of storage. – If the necessary period of storage is short, simple box files only may suffice, their contents being destroyed at predetermined intervals. If it is desirable to keep documents for longer periods the more elaborate equipment referred to in (iii) above may be essential.

OBITUARY

Thomas Geoghegan, F.C.A.

It is with regret that we record the death at the age of 89, at his home in Dublin on December 26th, of Mr Thomas Geoghegan, F.C.A., senior partner in the firm of Thomas Geoghegan & Co, Chartered Accountants, of Dublin, and a former President of The Institute of Chartered Accountants in Ireland.

Educated at Clongowes Wood College and the former Royal University, Dublin, Mr Geoghegan served his articles with Stokes Bros & Pim, Chartered Accountants, of Dublin.

He was admitted to membership of The Institute of Chartered Accountants in Ireland in 1900 and in the same year set up his own firm of Thomas Geoghegan & Co. A member of the Council of the Irish Institute from 1922 to 1944 he was President of the Institute for the years 1933 to 1935. He was the first chairman of The Dublin Society of Chartered Accountants from 1928 to 1930.

Mr Geoghegan was a former director of The National Bank Ltd, and the Newcastle Sanatorium Co Ltd, Wicklow. He was also chairman of the Patriotic Assurance Co Ltd, and a former chairman of Hamilton Long & Co Ltd, Dublin.

BUSINESS SCHOOLS APPEAL FUND

£5 Million Target Achieved

Lord Nelson of Stafford, Chairman of the Appeal Committee for the new British Business Schools at London and Manchester and for the development of management education generally, announced last week that the target figure of £5 million had been reached.

The appeal, launched last summer, and referred to in The Accountant of July 18th and November 7th, has met with impressive support from small organizations as well as medium-sized and large groups throughout the United Kingdom. Commenting on the success of the result (the appeal closed on December 31st) Lord Nelson said that the fund, with the additional financial support promised from Government resources, had now established a sound basis for a significant expansion in management education in the years immediately ahead.

Young Chartered Accountants

The Tube Investments group wish to recruit a small number of recently qualified chartered accountants, between the ages of 22 and 27, who have decided to make a career in industry and are seeking an opportunity to gain wide-ranging but concentrated experience with the intention of fitting themselves for responsible and progressive positions as quickly as possible.

Selected candidates will follow a carefully planned and supervised course of practical experience and development extending over a period of about eighteen months in one or other of the group's six operating divisions in the United Kingdom, and preferences for a particular division or geographical location will be accommodated as far as possible. The programme is designed to give a thorough insight into all facets of the company's business and an appreciation of the principal techniques of management by means of a combination of practical work in operating departments, viz. sales, production and finance, together with a period in the group computer unit and attendance at appropriate courses in management subjects, including those held at Tube Investment's own residential training centre.

Starting salary will be between £1,000 p.a. and £1,400 p.a., depending largely upon age, but since we are looking for men who can benefit by the period of planned experience there are good prospects of early appointment to a responsible accountancy post carrying a substantially higher salary and opportunities of further promotion which are group-wide.

If you would like to be considered, please write with full details quoting J.6, to the Director of Personnel, Internal consultancy is a new concept in this industry and both management and shop floor have agreed the necessity for this analytical study.

The position offers a wide range of problem solving, the adventurousness of consultancy work and the benefits of being employed by a large organization.

Age 23 upwards. Salary not less than £1,250.

Please ring REG 3501 for Application Form or send brief details in confidence to: R. N. Langley, Bell House, 175 Regent Street, London W1. Reference: MD/2066/L.

The Challoner Service Ltd
Management Appointments Division

SEEKING A SATISFYING JOB?

We think we can offer just that if you are a young who would like to join a large charity to tackle a variety of work, some of which involves travel. A progressive salary will be paid according to ability. Excellent holiday and pension arrangements. – Send details of age, experience, qualifications (if any) and present salary to Box SA7044.

TRAVELLING AUDITOR

The Milk Marketing Board has a vacancy for a travelling auditor who should be either a chartered accountant or a certified accountant and should preferably be under the age of 35.

The successful applicant will work from his own home which should be in the region of Gloucester. He will be required to investigate and report on claims made on the Board and also to conduct audits of the Board's own installations. A car will be provided and travelling and subsistence allowances are payable.

The commencing salary will be related to age and experience and the position is pensionable.

Applications should be made to the Personnel Officer, Milk Marketing Board, Thames Ditton, Surrey.

NEW FRONTIER FOR ACCOUNTANTS

If you want a job where you can be an active instigator of higher profits and improved efficiency you should apply now to ICI Mond Division. With the skilled, large-scale use of computers we are crossing the frontier between conventional accounting and sophisticated financial managements, and need accountancy-trained brains—backed if possible by a mathematics degree—to help us apply advanced techniques for optimising profits. You will find computers being used to integrate all commercial data processing in the Division and to develop standard costing and input/output models for a wide range of the Division's operations. This is only the beginning. For instance, two IBM system 360 computers ordered for 1966, to replace the existing IBM 1401 computer, will dramatically enlarge the field for further studies and developments. There are no fixed boundaries to the work, and no barriers to original thinking. We particularly want the sort of men who, after short initial training, will be able to blaze completely new trails. They are likely to be between 25 and 30, with two to three years' experience since qualifying, and will value the prospect of exploring new areas in company with other agile minds. The rewards will be good, the opportunities wide.

The location is Northwich, a surprisingly good place to work—no commuting problems, housing much cheaper than in the metropolis, plenty of good sport and urban culture near at hand.

How we put paid to our growing pains before they'd even started

As the most progressive of the larger building societies, we're proud of our growth graph. In ten years our assets have more than trebled and the number of our accounts nearly doubled. But you can only grow so far at this pace before you start feeling the effects. Book-keepers become book-bound, typists become type-cast.

So we took a revolutionary step for a building society. We bought ourselves a computer. The fastest and most efficient in the country. It's left us with a whole new expanse of growing space. Just goes to show how progressive we are. Why trust your investment with anyone less? It deserves progressive thinking behind it.

The starting salary to be paid, depending on ability and experience will not exceed £1,000 p.a. – Applications giving full details, in confidence, to be addressed to Whinney, Smith & Whinney, 4b Frederick's Place, Old Jewry, London EC2 (Ref. M.S.K.)

College of Advanced Technology Birmingham

ASSISTANT FINANCE OFFICER

The College which has been designated for university status, which it is hoped will be attained shortly, requires an assistant finance officer. Applicants should have had some experience since qualifying.

The position offers an opportunity for a man with ability and versatility to enter the field of administrative finance and includes estimating, budgeting, auditing, office and general administration and O. & M.

The salary range for this post is from £1,400–£1,995 and the successful candidate will initially be placed on the scale according to experience. Superannuation scheme, substantial holidays, removal expenses to Birmingham.

Application forms and further particulars are obtainable from the Staff Officer, College House, College of Advanced Technology, Gosta Green, Birmingham 4.

Inspector of Taxes

At 30 you should be earning over £1,800 and in command of forty-five staff in one of 700 Districts spread throughout the country. By 40 your salary can be more than £3,000 with good prospects of going higher. There are 150 posts with salaries ranging upwards from £3,500: these top jobs afford opportunity to participate closely in formulating taxation policy.

The work has great variety and gives scope for independence and initiative. The Inspector is expected to make his own decisions involving millions of pounds and applies professional skills in determining tax liability over the whole range of industry and commerce. He is in close contact with professional and business people of all kinds.

The main qualities required are common sense, sound judgement and a developed intellect. The job needs administrative ability but only a normal facility with figures. Arts graduates make successful Inspectors: women find the work satisfying and do well.

Posts in the Tax Inspectorate are available now for chartered or certified accountants (men or women) with at least two years' qualified experience. First or second class honours graduates and final year students may also apply. Candidates must be at least 20 on August 1st, 1965, and under 28 on the date of application. (An extension is granted to regular Service personnel and members of H.M. Overseas Civil Service who are under 45.) Selection is by group tests and interviews to be held throughout the year. There is no written examination.

For full details and application form write NOW to: The Secretary, CIVIL SERVICE COMMISSION, SAVILE ROW, LONDON W1. (15)

University of Hong Kong

ASSISTANT BURSARSHIP

Applications for the post of ASSISTANT BURSAR are invited from persons with good accountancy experience who hold a recognized accountancy or secretarial qualification. Experience of Hollerith punched-card equipment will be an advantage. Other things being equal, preference will be given to candidates who are between the ages of 24 and 34 years.

The salary scale attached to the post is £2,150 per annum, rising by annual increments of £75 to a maximum of £2,825 per annum. The equivalent of income tax in the Colony is comparatively low.

Tourist air passages (or first-class sea passages of equivalent cost) are provided for expatriate staff on first appointment and leaves. Accommodation at reasonable rental is provided for appointees domiciled abroad. There is a contributory superannuation scheme (5 per cent employee, 12½ per cent employer).

Further details about the University, terms of service and method of application should be obtained from the Association of Commonwealth Universities (Branch Office), Marlborough House, Pall Mall, London SW1.

Applications close in Hong Kong and London on March 5th, 1965.

TURNER & NEWALL LIMITED

A YEAR OF CONSIDERABLE ADVANCE

Extracts from the statement by the Chairman, Mr. R. G. Soothill for the year ended 30th September 1964

The Forty-Sixth Annual General Meeting of Turner & Newall Ltd will be held on 4th February, 1965, at the Chartered Accountants' Hall, Manchester, when it is expected that Mr R. G. Soothill, the Chairman of the Company, will preside. The consolidated trading profit for the year ended 30th September, 1964, was £13,736,725 compared with £11,178,087 for 1963. The final dividend recommended by the Board is 7 per cent on the present Issued Ordinary Stock making, with the interim dividend already paid, a total distribution of 10½ per cent for the year on such stock. Mr Soothill's Statement to the Stockholders has been circulated with the Report and Accounts, and the following are extracts.

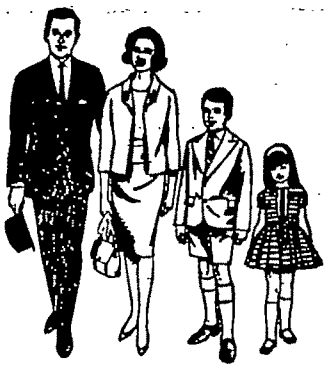
Total Group turnover for the year, after excluding intercompany trading, was 11·9 per cent higher than in the previous year, and aggregate trading profit (after depreciation) was increased by 22·9 per cent. This considerable advance was achieved almost universally throughout the operating companies, both at home and overseas. Progress has been particularly significant on the manufacturing side, but towards the end of the year the mining side, which has had a difficult time recently, also began to show a more satisfactory trend. Throughout the year the Company paid special attention to direct export trade from the United Kingdom, which reached a record level, being nearly 10 per cent higher in value than during the previous year.

In a very good year for TURNERS ASBESTOS CEMENT CO LTD total turnover was approximately 15 per cent higher than last year. There has been a significant increase in supplies to industrialized building firms, while demand for 'Everite' pressure pipes and 'Turnall' sewerage and drainage pipes has made it necessary to authorize additional manufacturing capacity. In the face of intense competition, exports of asbestos-cement products increased substantially, to a level 30 per cent above that of 1963. Our asbestos-cement companies in countries overseas also experienced a successful year.

TURNER BROTHERS ASBESTOS CO LTD achieved record turnover in both home and export markets, the combined increase being 18 per cent over the previous year, with greater home sales of asbestos textiles and jointings, and particularly good increases in conveyor and power transmission beltings. 'Duraform' asbestos-reinforced thermoplastic moulding material in sheet form was introduced during the year. The record export turnover was achieved in a year when competition increased and prices came under severe pressure, particularly in Europe.

NEWALLS INSULATION CO LTD increased its turnover both in direct product sales and in application contracts. Profit margins also showed a definite improvement. From October 1st, 1964, THE WASHINGTON CHEMICAL CO LTD, which enjoyed a year of expansion in the production and sale of chemicals, ceased to operate as such, and its activities are now combined with those of Newalls Insulation Co Ltd under the new name of NEWALLS INSULATION & CHEMICAL CO LTD. The mineral wool products of STILLITE PRODUCTS LTD met with a further development in demand, and production facilities are being expanded to meet the growing market. The insulation interests of J. W. ROBERTS LTD relate to their sprayed 'Limpet' asbestos, the sales of which increased during the year.

The steady upward trend in the demand for the wide range of friction materials produced by FERODO LTD was well maintained, and fresh turnover records were again established in both home and export sales. Ferodo brake linings were fitted to all winning cars in the 1964 World Championship series and also to Donald Campbell's record-breaking Bluebird. In India, sales of asbestos textiles, including brake linings, were once more at a very high level. Our brake lining interests in other overseas countries continue to develop.



The companies grouped under BRITISH INDUSTRIAL PLASTICS LTD had a most successful trading year with turnover and profit both reaching new record figures. The greatly increased sales of moulding powders and resins occupied to the full the enlarged capacity resulting from the rebuilding and modernizing of the plant during the last two years. The buoyant state of the plastics industry led to increased orders for the products of the engineering companies. There were increases in sales of all finished moulded products. During the year the plastics interests of J. W. ROBERTS LTD have been extensively reorganized with the intention of bringing this company more effectively into the field of technical plastics in the building, engineering and automotive industries.

There was a further and very substantial increase in sales of the Group's glass textile products. The programme of expansion and technical development of the glass fibre plants at Dungannon and Hindley Green will involve a capital investment of over £700,000.

The further enlargement in the staff of our marketing company, TURNERS ASBESTOS FIBRES LTD, has resulted in a marked increase of turnover in asbestos fibres. Although profits have not fully marched in step, it now appears that, as regards chrysotile fibre, a closer balance is being achieved between demand and supply. We still have to contend with political factors, but our general working relationships in Rhodesia and Swaziland, and at BELL ASBESTOS MINES LTD in Canada, are satisfactorily maintained and our local managements continue to deal with their many problems in an experienced and wise manner. The national economies of both Rhodesia and Swaziland owe a great deal to the mining and marketing of asbestos, developed over so many years under the leadership of Turner & Newall Ltd, through its subsidiary mining companies, RHODESIAN & GENERAL ASBESTOS CORPORATION (PVT.) LTD and NEW AMIANTHUS MINES (PTY.) LTD.

Future projects to which we are already committed or which are fully planned involve capital expenditure of about £10 million which amount is likely to be spent over approximately the next two years. In addition, there are under consideration other projects at home and overseas which would involve, were they all to mature, capital investment of the order of £7½ million.

Our manufacturing companies overseas continue to have good prospects and our mining companies are now operating in a more favourable world market for chrysotile asbestos fibre. It would clearly be imprudent, at the present time, to attempt any specific forecast of results for the current financial year. Stockholders can nevertheless be assured that our operating companies, at home and abroad, have never been better equipped to cope with the problems lying ahead.

THE question of whether the written word or the spoken word is the more satisfying teaching medium has never been satisfactorily resolved nor is it likely to be. The facilities available, the attitude of the student towards learning, the kind of knowledge to be assimilated and the ability of the lecturer or writer to impart it are among the variable factors to be taken into account.

In an interesting article reproduced in this issue, Mr A. D. C. PETERSON puts forward the merits and drawbacks of teaching by means of correspondence courses. The main advantages, as he sees them, are that the student can take the course in his own home and at his own speed and that the tutorial material may be kept up to date more easily than can 'textbooks or teachers'. The overriding disadvantage is the sense of isolation which descends upon and discourages many students. It is this feeling of loneliness, combined with the opinion that 'there is an occupational risk of developing a narrow, inflexible and arithmetical outlook in the profession of accountancy', which prompts Mr PETERSON politely to point out that the correspondence course may not be the best means of training accountants.

This is fair comment, but the tutorial system in accountancy is, in fact, much more varied than Mr PETERSON suggests. Indeed, three systems of training, all distinctive, may be exemplified. Taking their sponsors alphabetically, there is the American Institute syllabus which combines whole-time college attendance with the minimum of practical experience before qualifying. Then, at the other extreme, there is the English Institute which relies mainly on a blend of practical office training and an independent system of correspondence courses. Finally, pursuing the middle way, there is the Scottish Institute which provides for an academic year and conducts its own oral tutorial classes with the facilities of independent correspondence courses additionally available. Further, in the last two instances, the activities of student societies go some way to promoting a collegiate atmosphere during training.

At a time when the relationship between professional bodies, both national and international, is becoming markedly more cordial, we do not propose to disrupt it by expressing an opinion as to which training method evolves the best accountant. Truthfully, the finished products of all three are often distinguishable only by their accents. They have in common – and this is what really matters – a degree of character and ability and an outward look which belie Mr PETERSON's rather gloomy fears about narrowness and inflexibility.

Back Duty and Deceased Persons

TIME LIMITS

DECEASED persons figure very largely in back duty investigations undertaken by the Inland Revenue, and the reason for this is not hard to find. As long as he lives the taxpayer is in sole control of his finances. When he dies, the control passes to more disinterested persons. Moreover, they are in duty bound to swear an Inland Revenue affidavit showing all the assets which passed on his death. Any inconsistency between the extent of those assets, and the income as returned by the deceased in his lifetime, is thus brought to light. As a result, the Inland Revenue may be the chief beneficiary in two different roles; as collector of estate duty, and as collector of income tax.

To what extent can the Inland Revenue enforce the payment of tax and penalties incurred by the deceased during his lifetime? This is a complicated question. One starts with the basic rule, usually expressed in a dead language as actio personalis moritur cum persona: the acts of the deceased die with him. This however does not suit the Inland Revenue, nor indeed the fellow taxpayers of the deceased who have paid their fair share. Inroads have been made upon it, both in regard to the raising of assessments, and in regard to the suing for penalties. These two aspects of the same field have been the subject of quite different development. In this article we deal only with time limits for assessments.

The legislation consolidated in the Income Tax Act, 1952, includes various provisions for assessing the personal representatives of a deceased taxpayer in respect of tax on income accruing during his life, but section 47 which lays down time limits, discriminates in favour of such personal representatives. Section 47 (1) lays down the well-known six-year time limit for making assessments, with a practically unlimited extension where fraud or wilful default has been committed by or on behalf of the person assessed. This extension, even by its own terms, cannot apply where the assessment is made on personal representatives, but the fraud or wilful default was not theirs – a point which some tax inspectors do not always appreciate. Section 47 (2) expressly provides that in no case is section 47 (1) to permit an assessment, 'for the purposes of the charge of income tax on the executors', to be made after the end of the third complete tax year following the death. Thus, if a man dies on January 22nd, 1965, leaving income unassessed, then his personal representatives cannot be charged to tax for a year earlier than 1958–59; and even then the assessment for that year would have to be made before April 6th, 1965 (section 47 (1)). Moreover, all assessments under section 47 are barred after April 5th, 1968 (section 47 (2)).

Suppose that the income understated in the deceased's lifetime was from a partnership. His death dissolves the partnership, except for the limited purpose of winding it up. Section 144 of the Income Tax Act, 1952, requires a joint assessment in the partnership name. The Inland Revenue have argued that such an assessment is not (for section 47 purposes) made on the individual partners, but that section 144 makes the partnership a separate entity for this purpose; subject to section 47 (1) but not subject to section 47 (2). It would be interesting to know how many such assessments have been made and how much tax collected on this argument. The argument is wrong, as has now been decided by Mr Justice BUCKLEY, in Harrison v. Willis and Willis's Executors[1]. Two brothers WILLIS had traded in partnership. One died on December 17th, 1957, thus dissolving the partnership. There was never any partnership between the survivor and the deceased's executors. More than four years after the death, assessments were made on the partnership for the years 1941–42 to 1947–48 i.e. on the survivor and on the executors of the deceased, on 'fraud or wilful default' grounds under the proviso to section 47 (1). The assessment said 'Willis Brothers (W. H. WILLIS and Executors of H. H. WILLIS deceased)'. There was no suggestion that the executors had been guilty of fraud or wilful default. The Special Commissioners held that the partnership assessments could not be justified under section 47 (1) since they were precluded by section 47 (2). The assessments were on the partnership, one partner was dead, and therefore his executors could rely on section 47 (2). The High Court upheld this decision. It followed that the assessments were invalid, both as against the executors and as against the surviving partner. We should stress here that the case was decided on the preliminary point of whether the Inland Revenue had the powers they claimed, assuming that fraud or wilful default had been committed.

When, as a result of judicial comments made in C.I.R. v. Hinchy (39 A.T.C. 13), the Government agreed to modify the law as to income tax penalties, the opportunity was taken to lengthen the time limits for raising assessments, where tax had been lost through the taxpayers' 'fault' i.e. his fraud, wilful default or (a new concept in income tax) 'neglect'. Section 51 contains some quite unnecessarily complicated provisions laying down the scope of this extension. Section 51 (2) provides with unexpected brevity that > 'No assessment under this section shall be made on any person except for the purpose of making good to the Crown a loss of tax attributable to his neglect'.

The word 'his' makes it clear, except perhaps in the minds of some tax inspectors, that here again, as in section 47 (1) of the 1952 Act, the delinquency of Mr A. may warrant assessments (which are otherwise out of time) upon Mr A. himself, but it cannot warrant such assessments being made on his non-delinquent executors. That situation is dealt with by section 53 which provides that the executors may be assessed at any time before the end of the third assessment year following his death (the same limit as in section 47 (2)) in respect of tax for any assessment year ending not earlier than six years before the death.

Assume that Mr A. died on January 22nd, 1965, and that he was in fact underassessed for 1958–59. If this fact is discovered and the necessary steps taken before April 6th, 1965, his executors can be assessed, even if the understatement was the most innocent in the world. This is the effect of section 47 of the 1952 Act. Suppose now that the understatement is not discovered until, say, May 1965. If the understatement was innocent then it is too late to raise a 1958-59 assessment because the normal six-year time limit has by then expired, and there is no extension where the understatement is innocent. Assume now that the Inland Revenue can show that the understatement is attributable to Mr A.'s neglect. Seeing that 1958–59 ended within six years before the death, section 53 permits an assessment to be made; provided of course it is made before April 6th, 1968.

For the purpose of partnership assessments, section 51 of the 1960 Act is modified by section 52. It breaks through the rigid provisions of section 144 of the 1952 Act and permits of assessments on persons who have been individual partners. Suppose now that a partner has died; to what extent can assessments be made on his personal representatives? Section 63 (3) is in point. It says:

> 'For the purposes of this Part of this Act (which includes sections 51–53), an assessment made in the partnership name and the tax charged in such an assessment shall, according to the law in Scotland as well as according to the law elsewhere in the United Kingdom, be deemed to be respectively an assessment made on the partners and tax charged on and payable by them.'

In the Willis case cited above the Inland Revenue argued that section 63 (3) did not go so far as to constitute a partnership assessment, an assessment actually on the partners themselves, and that, therefore, the limitation implied in section 53 on assessments on personal representatives did not apply. They further argued that the last of the assessments, for 1948–49, made that year the 'normal year', so that under section 51 they could go back to 1942–43, being within the six years before the normal year. The first of these arguments was rejected, so that the second did not arise. Mr Justice BUCKLEY held that for a dead man to be assessed in his own name was not in accordance with the general income tax code, and he pointed out that by virtue of section 79 of the 1960 Act, the back duty provisions in that Act were to be construed as one with the Income Tax Acts. He expressed doubt as to the effect of a partnership assessment in the firm name where a partner was already dead. If it was capable of being treated as an assessment on his personal representatives then it must comply with section 53. The assessments in the present case having been made after the expiry of the three-year time limit, they could not stand.

Towards a University of the Post

by A. D. C. PETERSON
Department of Education, University of Oxford

We are indebted to the Editor of the New Scientist for permission to reproduce this article from his issue of December 10th, 1964, as a pertinent contribution to the discussion of training for the profession.

ONE thing which seems to have escaped notice in the general scepticism or enthusiasm which has greeted the Robbins recommendations is that they are concerned only with the expansion of higher education for the same sort of ability group as is already getting it. True, they recognize that many of those within this group are not the dedicated scholars for whom our specialist honours courses were designed; but they are not, by definition, concerned at all with the next ability group (as measured by examination success) who are destined, when they can get it, for 'further' rather than 'higher' education. At the same time, Britain aims at 17 per cent of the age group entering full-time higher education in 1980, while the United States admitted 40·3 per cent in the autumn of 1963.

We may well be right in expanding full-time tertiary education at a rather slower pace, but only if we provide adequate opportunities for part-time further education to all those who want either to qualify themselves for what are called the 'sub-professional' jobs or to expand the range of their personal cultural experience. These are things which hundreds of thousands of people will want to do in the last quarter of this century, as unskilled labour becomes unemployable and shortened working hours provide unexpected leisure. They can be achieved by other far cheaper and perhaps socially preferable means than the accepted pattern of three or four years' full-time attendance at a university or college.

A Neglected Technique

One of the alternative techniques most notably neglected in Britain is the correspondence course. In Russia correspondence education is a recognized and integral part of the higher education system. Of the 2½ million (roughly) in higher education in the Soviet Union in 1960–61, 1¼ million were correspondence students, being taught by the same teachers as the resident students and with a statutory right to paid leave in order to attend short residential courses and prepare for their final examinations. In the U.S.A. there are about one million enrolled in courses organized by the Armed Forces, nearly another million in the fifty-six accredited schools of the National Home Study Council, while over one hundred thousand take part in courses organized by universities and colleges.

As Lord Bowden has pointed out, the correspondence course has a vital role to play in meeting Britain's future educational needs. If it is to do so, the 'industry' must be brought within the framework of normal education, and supported by artificial aids of all kinds.

It is not that, in terms of pure numbers, we do not use correspondence teaching in this country. Sir Edward Boyle, speaking at Ditchley last year, estimated that there might be half a million people enrolled in such courses in this country. But correspondence education here, as opposed to Russia, America or Sweden, is still regarded as rather outside the pale of the normal educational system. Consequently we know very little about the courses the half million may be taking, even when they are taken, as they often are, to supplement residential studies at colleges of technology or further education. This is a great pity, because great though the advantages of correspondence as a method may be, it is enormously enhanced if it can be meshed in with other forms of education.

Social Advantages

The great social advantages of correspondence education are that the learner can follow the course in his own time, at his own pace and in his own house. This does not merely solve the difficulty of providing capital for building and the cost of travel and halls of residence. Many would-be part-time students can reach the college of technology easily enough but are not free at the time when the classes they want to follow take place. Correspondence is therefore often the easiest way to achieve the widespread combination of part-time education with productive work which seems socially more desirable than a slow expansion of full-time education for an élite – with the corollary of perpetuating an educationally deprived class. Educationally, the great advantage of correspondence education is that it can be kept up to date more easily than either textbooks or teachers. This is a factor, of course, of size and costs money, but the potential is clear. A correspondence course specializing in some area of engineering, law or accountancy in which practice is continually changing can rewrite part of its course every year, and adequately fee the leaders in the profession to supervise the re-writing. The costs can be spread over the large number of students enrolled. No textbook can be treated in this way and only a small minority of teachers can be kept abreast of such up-to-date refresher courses.

A Weakness

One American engineering course spends £50,000 a year on keeping itself up to date. It is one of the weaknesses of most correspondence colleges in this country that they are not financially strong enough to take full advantage of this asset. Operating in a country where there is no longer a tradition of paying for education, and yet not part of the publicly provided system, they tend to pay their tutors and charge their students at rates so cheap that the whole industry is seriously under-capitalized. This lack of money also prevents many colleges from taking advantage of the developments in programmed learning to replan their courses and of those in data-processing to control their reactions to student submissions. With modern equipment a correspondence college can not only plan a course in some new branch of science or technology in the light of the most up-to-date theory and at an appropriate level of sophistication, but it can identify more quickly than any other teaching medium which elements in the course are causing difficulty to the average student.

Most of the disadvantages of correspondence education can be summed up in the now hackneyed phrase 'the loneliness of the long distance student'. Correspondence students suffer from a sense of isolation not only from their tutors but also from each other; moreover their mental activity can easily become too much stereotyped in a world of symbols, verbal or mathematical, and a pattern of predetermined responses. The better colleges try to ensure, therefore, that a student's work is criticized always by the same tutor and that some sort of a personal relationship is built up by post between tutor and student. Clearly the Russian system of having the same tutors for students actually attending the university or institute and those studying by correspondence, and of bringing the correspondence students in for short residential courses where they actually meet their tutors is a great improvement on this merely postal contact. Something of the kind has been tried in a small way in this country by that pioneer in method, the National Extension College, with short courses both at Cambridge and Keele for students studying externally for London degrees.

Another possibility, much employed in Sweden and occasionally in America, is the use of local educational buildings, schools or libraries, as centres where correspondence students may meet and exchange their experience, and where they can be visited periodically by tutors from the correspondence school. Finally, there is the possibility, which has been tried by Nottingham University Extra Mural Department, of linking correspondence education with radio or television. If one of the great virtues of correspondence – the possibility for each student to proceed at his own pace – is to be preserved, however, there are serious difficulties in fitting the radio and televison material to the correspondence, and it seems probable that the best role for the University of the Air is as an enrichment of the University of the Post.

Suited to 'On the Job' Training

Correspondence is clearly a method which is particularly well suited to 'on the job' training. The learner need not leave the place of his employment in order to attend full-time at an institution, while at the same time his work experience provides him with the practical side of his education, the lack of which is a serious flaw in more purely academic correspondence courses. Thus the electronic engineer taking a correspondence course either to further or freshen his knowledge of his own field has no need of special arrangements for practical laboratory work because he is working with electronic equipment all day. The same is true of the young solicitor's clerk working in a law office and preparing for his qualifying examinations by correspondence. It may well be, therefore, that the Industrial Training Boards would do well to look into the possibility of combining correspondence courses with day and block release, and supporting this combination with radio or television programmes.

There may be a danger, however, in the cheapness and attractiveness of correspondence courses if they are used as the main medium for initial professional education. To work as an articled clerk while taking a correspondence course for professional examinations is good training but it is a very narrow form of education compared with full-time or even 'block' attendance at a univeristy or college of further education. It suffers from most of the disadvantages of the old 'night-school' approach to professional training, and those who deplore what they consider to be the excessive influence of accountants on the boards of British industry may also be concerned that accountants alone of similar ranking professions normally receive their post-school education in this way. Where correspondence is used as the normal method for initial professional training there seems an exceptionally strong case, therefore, for combining it with all the safeguards against 'loneliness' which have been mentioned. If, as seems not improbable, there is an occupational risk of developing a narrow, inflexible and arithmetical outlook in the profession of accountancy, it seems particularly unfortunate that this profession alone should rely so exclusively on what is, if left to itself, the least humanizing and broadening of techniques for its initial professional education.

Registration?

It seems probable then that correspondence could play a much larger part in the rapid expansion of educational facilities at the 'sub-Robbins' level that we shall undoubtedly need. If it is to do so, it must somehow be brought within the normal educational system. With even preparatory schools rapidly turning themselves into non-profit-making trusts, the correspondence field is the only one which is still almost wholly commercial and in which there is no generally accepted control of standards. Undoubtedly many schools do maintain high standards but anyone could set up a correspondence school tomorrow, issue a prospectus and fleece the customers, British and overseas, as much as he liked. If he felt so inclined he could presumably call his school the Oxford and Cambridge Correspondence Department and some poor victims would imagine they were getting diplomas from both Universities. One European remedy for this situation has been for the Ministry of Education to assert control by registration over correspondence colleges, just as it does in this country over all other forms of school. The American pattern has been for the colleges to set up themselves their own accrediting agency with really tough standards and an absolutely unimpeachable independent validating authority. Correspondence education is obviously more open to fraud than any other type because its clients are scattered and far off: to earn respectability, therefore, correspondence colleges must be, as one American expert in the field recently put it, 'holier than thou, and then some'.

External Control

Fortunately there are signs that the industry itself is taking steps in this direction. In the last two years we have seen the beginnings of a British accreditation system initiated both by the Association of British Correspondence Colleges and the Correspondence College Standards Association; we even have the rather innocuous seeming body the European Council for Education by Correspondence. But none of these bodies shows signs as yet of developing the kind of rigour and unimpeachable external control that has done so much to validate correspondence teaching in the United States. Nor is there really any reason why they should undertake this admittedly expensive operation. If correspondence is going to be widely used as an educational method in this country it seems inevitable that it will be largely paid for either directly or indirectly out of public funds. The logical implication of this is that the control of minimum standards and the prevention of actual abuses should become as much a function of the Department of Education and Science as it is for all other forms of education. American experience at the time of the GI Bill of Rights shows that any such system of inspection and registration would need to be carried out in co-operation with the colleges. This in itself might be a step in bringing the colleges into closer contact with the national system and making more possible a planned use of a medium which at present operates in the twilight zone of the educational world.

Most advanced electronic calculator in existence?

Probably

Most beautifully designed?

Certainly

The new Friden* 130 Electronic Calculator is mid-way between a mechanical desk calculator and an electronic computer. It has no moving parts — all calculations are performed by solid-state electronic components, and entries and answers are displayed on a cathode ray tube like a miniature T.V. screen. It works in milliseconds and it works silently.

Operation of the 130 is through a very simple keyboard with clearly marked controls. Results appear on four registers making it possible to work on multistop problems in logical order without manually re-entering amounts. All entries and answers are automatically aligned around a selected decimal point. In classic simplicity and elegance of design, it is unmatched among today's office machines.

Accounting Research

THE P. D. LEAKE FELLOWSHIP AT BALLIOL

CONTRIBUTED

EARLY in 1963, Balliol College, Oxford, accepted an offer by the P. D. Leake Committee to establish a P. D. Leake Research Fellowship at the College. The P. D. Leake Committee consists of five members of the Council of The Institute of Chartered Accountants in England and Wales who are charged with the duties of determining how the income of the P. D. Leake Trust – a charitable trust created under the will of a deceased member of the Institute – shall be applied. The object of the Fellowship is to make it possible for research to be carried out at university level in subjects falling within the field of accountancy, applied economics and public finance, within the charitable object of the Trust, which is defined as 'to benefit and advance the sciences of accounting and of political economy including the subject of public finance and taxation'.

Scope for Research

The accountant and the economist approach similar problems from different standpoints and any strengthening of the links between the two must be not only of mutual benefit but also in the national interest; there is, indeed, considerable scope for research into the relationship between their two disciplines.

The accountant is concerned with presenting a statement about a company's activities over a specified past period – about its resulting position and its likely future development; while the economist is concerned with why the company behaved as it has done and how its behaviour fits into his model of the operation of economic systems as a whole.

The economist also studies financial trends and from them endeavours to establish the overall position of the economy as a whole and to trace the types of change which take place and the causes of these changes throughout industry; he then looks ahead and, in the light of what he has learned, tries to forecast the future pattern of the economy. To enable him to do this he needs the accountant's figures.

This mutual interest in the finances of different types of undertakings provides the link between the accountant and the economist; the better the way in which figures are presented, the more effectively can the economist determine the changes in the economy and the reasons for them. The more readily the reasons for these changes are determined, the better can the accountant aid management in forecasting and planning the optimum development of the individual undertakings comprising 'the economy'.

On this common ground – the activities of many sorts of individual undertakings – both the economist and the accountant share fairly common concepts, such as capital and income. Corresponding to the difference in opinion among economists as to the most useful definitions of these concepts, there are differences between economists and accountants, too. Much thought has been given by accountants to the most desirable accounting practices for the evaluation of these and related concepts.

There is, of course, much scope for cross-fertilization. It is commonly felt by economists that accountants could provide information in a form suitable for the verification of economic hypotheses. A mutual attempt should, therefore, be made to formulate precisely what hypotheses concerning the behaviour of an undertaking the economist would test and how accounting presentation might be altered in certain clearly-defined respects to enable the financial implications of these hypotheses to be isolated and studied. To present a balanced picture it should also be said that the economist does not always make the best use of the information contained in company and other accounts in their present form.

Combined Approach

A useful piece of research would be for accountants and economists together to draw up a comprehensive list of desirable changes or additions to accounting procedure and possibly some conventions, justified by reference not to abstract economic theory but to explicit empirical testing of certain hypotheses of interest both to the economist and to the accountant. This should be accompanied by some indication of the importance, for the empirical work concerned, of each proposed change, and ideally, a thorough testing to show how far the changes could be made without detracting from the main purpose of the accounts which is not to provide data for economists but to present a true and fair view of the affairs of the undertaking to which they relate; it could well be that some of the changes thus evolved would enable the accounts to show more precisely the efficiency of the utilization of the resources of the undertakings to which they relate.

The present holder of the P. D. Leake Research Fellowship at Balliol College, Dr W. Beckerman, is currently working on this sort of problem with particular reference to the use of accounting data and the accounting records of individual firms in the analysis of economic growth in Britain over the last few years. Dr Beckerman will be relinquishing his appointment as P. D. Leake Research Fellow with effect from October 1965 on taking up a permanent appointment at Balliol. In consequence, a successor is being sought to continue and extend this most worth-while project.

The Fellowship offers a unique opportunity to undertake research and the attention of qualified readers – particularly, perhaps, those also holding a degree in economics – who may be interested in contributing to this important and wide field is directed to the official announcement inviting applications which appears on page V of this issue.

The Capital Gains Tax—III

CONTRIBUTED

IN last week's article reference was made to the arguments for and against the taxation of redemption profits on gilt-edged securities, and the point was made that the tax-free capital profit given to the lender by the Government when a loan was repaid was nothing more, in effect, than interest in another form. This is well illustrated in the case of the Funding 3½ per cent 1999–2004 Loan which was issued at eighty in February 1957. At that time 2½ per cent Consols were yielding 4·6 per cent, and 3½ per cent War Loan 4·8 per cent, but because, and only because, the Funding 3½ per cent Loan yielded a tax-free profit on redemption, subscribers to the loan were prepared to accept a yield of only 4·375 per cent.

In other words, the capital profit of £20 per cent obtainable forty-two to forty-seven years hence enabled the Government in 1957 successfully to float the loan at a lower rate of interest than that currently prevailing for other Government stocks which had been issued at par. No Chancellor would now be rash enough to think of cutting the rate of interest on the Funding 3½ per cent Loan to 3 per cent, while leaving the redemption profit tax-free, as at present. Yet in money terms, there would be little difference between doing just that and taxing the capital profit on redemption at a rate of tax roughly equivalent to the present standard rate.

In an article in The Financial Times for January 14th, Lord Radcliffe asked why National Savings Certificates should be exempt from capital gains tax, though they threw up a clear 'gain', and he answered his own question thus:

> 'Obviously, because it has been so consistently the policy of successive Governments to encourage this sort of gain that it would be an outrage to penalize it now by taxation.'

Lord Radcliffe then went on to say that holders of other forms of Government debt were well entitled to feel that they had received a similar encouragement, and that of all the sad comicalities of the proposed gains tax the most comic was to see the Government at such a time as the present driving off the support for gilt-edged that they so badly needed and thereby sending up the cost of borrowing against themselves.

Already the threat of the capital gains tax seems to have affected adversely the terms on which local authority long-term loans can be issued, the recent two £25 million London County Council loans having been issued at par (to circumvent any question of gains tax on a redemption profit), but with coupons as high as 6¾ per cent for a period of nine and a half years in the one case and twenty-five and a half years in the other. The immediate effect was to reduce the market price of a comparable London County Council 6 per cent stock from 96¼ to 94¼ and to lower the price of industrial debentures by 10*s* to £1.

It seems difficult to understand how, on any accepted meaning of the word 'disposal', the repayment of a Government loan can constitute the 'disposal of an asset'. If a man takes out an insurance policy on his life he is entitled (within limits) to tax relief on the premiums and to receive the policy moneys free of tax on the maturity or surrender of the policy. So why, if an investor sacrifices part of the annual interest on a Government loan in order to receive a capital profit at the end of the term, should he be taxed on the latter but not on the policy moneys?

Other Considerations

There is a school of thought which says that no breach of covenant would be involved in taxing redemption profits, since a bond would be redeemed at the contractual level and any tax on the capital profits would be a subsequent and separate act. In the case of an industrial debenture where the Government and the borrower are two different persons there may possibly be some point in this argument; but where the taxing authority and the borrower are the same person the argument comes near to pure sophistry. Any capital gains tax on the redemption profit on an existing Government stock cannot fail to be regarded by most people as coming very close to a breach of contract.

On the other hand, if all gains (with few exceptions) made after next Budget day are to be subject to the new tax, except where they already fall to be taxed as income, there can be no very good argument for exempting Government stocks which are sold before they mature, or indeed any profits which exceed the difference between the price of issue and the redemption value. This latter situation can easily arise because interest rates have been rising over the past fifteen years and some low coupon stocks issued at a discount, with many years to run to maturity, are now being quoted 20–25 points below the issue price. Examples were given in the previous article, and it is generally expected that prices will slide further before Budget day.

The Base Date

The adoption of next Budget day as the base date for the capital gains tax is open to very serious criticism, especially in regard to stocks and shares which, in the United States, bring in four-fifths of the tax and may be expected to do the same in Britain.

Budget day is only valid as the starting date for a new tax where conditions are reasonably normal at the time and the intention to impose the new tax has not been announced months ahead, so that it depresses the market after the Budget and not before. Doubt as to what a particular Budget may bring forth has a lowering effect on share prices even in normal times, except where the incentive of tax cuts is widely and reasonably anticipated. But the present times are very far from normal: Bank rate is 7 per cent – a crisis rate; there is a 'temporary' 15 per cent surcharge on imports, no sign has yet appeared that the measures taken are relieving the heavy deficit on the balance of payments, and there is a widespread lack of confidence in the Government's financial policies. Added to which the harshness and illogicalities of many of the corporation tax and capital gains proposals have had a particularly depressing effect on some sections of the stock-market concerned with finance in any shape or form. The Financial Times – Actuaries share index for January 16th, 1965, shows that the index figure for the financial group (comprising banks and discount houses, insurance companies, investment trusts, hire-purchase and property companies) has fallen from 109·87 to 98·51 since October 1st, 1964.

Life insurance companies are immune for the most part from the underwriting losses of the composite companies, but the share prices of four proprietary companies, Legal and General, Sun Life, Equity and Law and Provident Life Association of London, are at or near an all-time 'low' for the past two years, despite large increases in business and in investment income. Compared with the highest prices during the same period they represent a fall of 33⅓ per cent, notwithstanding the fact that Equity and Law will shortly be announcing the result of its latest triennial valuation. Some part of the fall in prices is admittedly due to the general malaise of the insurance share market, brought about by the underwriting losses of the composite group, but most of it has been brought about by fears associated with the possibility of an extension of Government pension schemes, the control of investment policy and, in particular, the new tax proposals.

Other Companies

The composite companies have fared even worse. During the same two years Northern and Employers have fallen from 170*s* to 110*s*, Prudential 'B' from 142*s* to 80*s*, Eagle Star from 104*s* to 59*s*, and General Accident from 79*s* to 45*s*. In 1962 all four shares were very appreciably higher.

Leading banks had a good year in 1964 and made scrip issues and/or increased dividends. Even so, share prices in some cases, such as Lloyds and Martins, are within sight of all-time 'lows'. Hire-purchase companies, with the exception of Lombard Banking, are all at lowest prices, while investment trusts are quoted at 15–45 per cent discount on net asset values. In the property market City of London Real Property shares have fallen from 78*s* to 53*s* since January 1st, 1964, City Centre from 44*s* to 27*s*, Slough Estates from 29*s* to 22*s* and Capital and Counties from 11*s* 6*d* to 7*s* 6*d*.

If a purchaser of any of the above shares at highest prices holds them until they make good the whole of the lost ground, and no more, no capital gains tax will be payable and no injustice will be done. But if prices decline further after Budget day and a holder, for some reason or other, is compelled to sell, it seems that the only loss which can be set off against capital gains will be the loss which accrued since Budget day. This is because it is generally understood that the loss for tax purposes will be based on the original buying price only if this is lower than the value next Budget day. This is manifestly unjust.

The changes in the Finance Bill, 1962 (which set out the short-term gains tax provisions), during its passage through Parliament were very numerous and together added fourteen pages to the Act as compared with the first print of the Bill. The amendments to the 1965 Finance Bill may be expected to run into hundreds, so that a much fairer date for the commencement of the capital gains tax would be the date when the Act receives the Royal assent, by which time the City and the investment world generally will have been able to assess much more accurately the probable effect of the tax on share prices and so establish sounder values.

Fallacy of the Tax

In the case of Wall v. London & Provincial Trust Ltd ([1920] 1 Ch. 45; 2 Ch. 582), Younger, J., set out the legal position governing the distribution of capital profits under a company's articles of association and said that where a company kept its capital and revenue accounts separately, it could only pay a capital dividend out of realized capital profits if it first valued its entire assets to make sure there was no loss on capital account.

The Chancellor's statement of December 8th said that the capital gains tax would be imposed only on gains which were 'realized' after next Budget day. In a case concerning a building and investment society in 1886, Kay, J., defined 'realized' as meaning 'reduced to actual cash in hand', or at least 'rendered tangible for the purposes of dividend'. The Chancellor proposes to extend the meaning of 'realized' to include 'disposal by sale, long lease, exchange, forfeiture, and the transfer of ownership by gift or on death', and Parliament can, of course, adopt this proposal if it thinks fit. But the Chancellor also proposes to tax a realized capital gain even where a valuation of the capital account as a whole would throw up a loss. This is in violent conflict with the most elementary of accounting principles, and is a point which is strongly stressed by Lord Radcliffe, who says:

> 'Savings in the hands of any one investor, whether a settlement trustee, a fund manager or a private individual, are distributed over a number of items that together constitute the fund. No one in real life supposes that the mere realization of one of those items for a larger monetary sum than its cost makes the owner of the fund better off than he was before the sale. The surplus goes to capital reserve in one form or another, and it goes there because he is concerned only with his total position, and he is not so simple as to imagine that a profit can emerge from the realization of one part of the whole. By ignoring this a realized gains tax starts on a false footing by treating as a profit that which is not a profit at all.'

But even, said Lord Radcliffe, if all the taxpayer's assets were valued each year at current levels, the gains tax would still be an unmanageable tax because values would rise and fall, and the taxpayer's increment of one year would be his decrement of the next year.

What the Chancellor is saying, in effect, is: 'Realize your gains if you like and hang the unrealized losses. If you don't realize them, you'll be taxed just the same, because one day you will have to die.' But it seems that there will be this very important difference between a gain which is actually or notionally realized in life and a gain which is notionally realized on death. In the case of the former, tax will be payable on a single realized gain even though the rest of the capital fund is heavily in debt; in the case of death the whole of the fund will have to be valued before a gain can be established, and even then the first £5,000 of gain will be exempt.

Consequences of the Tax

One obvious result of the gains tax is that everyone will try to hang on to what he has got like grim death, and a new era will dawn in which capital will tend to become immobile with all the ill effects that that connotes for the economy. A writer in The Times, though opposed to the tax in its present form, commends as laudable the aim to distribute wealth, but this is precisely what the new tax will not do.

Under the existing income tax code a wealthy person, by means of a discretionary trust in favour of members of his family, can postpone the payment of estate duty on a settled fund for sixty or eighty years and at the same time save himself a substantial amount in surtax. Or he can save himself surtax and confer substantial benefits on his infant and unmarried children by means of an accumulation trust. The purpose of Part XVIII of the Income Tax Act, 1952, is to regulate the procedure in these matters to ensure that there is no abuse of the processes and no unauthorized loss to the Revenue. The basic principle that it is a good thing for the head of a family who is possessed of ample means to distribute part of his wealth among the family, or others, before he dies, and preferably more than five years before he dies, is not in dispute and is accepted by the Revenue.

Now all this is to be turned upside down because, according to the Chancellor:

> 'the dividing line between capital and income has become blurred. The income tax system has been misused by some to avoid paying tax by entering into arrangements (see the definition of "settlement" in section 403 of the 1952 Act) which dress up income, which is taxed, to look like capital, which is mainly untaxed'.

and because, one rather suspects, anything which is not payment for a job is regarded as speculation. But the Revenue is at least equally as astute as the taxpayer, and if there are any loopholes left in the tax avoidance legislation, the Revenue has not yet shown itself inadequate to the task of stopping them up by the simple process of asking Parliament to pass the necessary legislation. This is a very much cheaper and simpler method, and the Chancellor should not forget that there are still some instances where the taxpayer is taxed more than once on the same income.

Tax Topics

TAX COMPARISONS

INTERNATIONAL comparisons of tax systems are notoriously difficult, not least because taxes, even though they may bear the same name in different countries, are operated on different bases. For example, certain expenses are deductible in one country but not in another, or capital allowances are more generous in the one than in the other, etc. The biggest problem of all, however, arises from the fact that comparisons of specific taxes overlook the fact that any individual tax tends to fit into the structure of aggregate taxes operating in the country at that point of time.

In determining the form of any single tax, its rates, etc., due consideration must be given to the other imposts and levies which taxpayers already pay. For example, much play has been made in Britain of the fact that the proposed rate of corporation tax, coupled with the income tax deductible on dividends, will not be significantly different from the rate currently applicable in the U.S.A., or France.

On the other hand, what needs also to be borne in mind is that the personal income taxes in these two countries are very much less onerous than in Britain for, although the structure of rates appears fairly comparable, the U.S.A. system has income splitting and the French the quotient familiale. In both these systems, while the income of husband and wife is aggregated, the tax payable is twice the tax charged on half the joint income. In other words, each party to the marriage is given half the income and taxed in effect on that income, so that instead of one-half of the income being subject to high progressive taxes as would be the case in the United Kingdom, it is merely subject to the lower rates.

Furthermore, the progressiveness of taxes is much higher in the United Kingdom than elsewhere. For example, given the prospective income tax rates next year, a married man in the United Kingdom with unearned income of £2,100 will be taxed at a marginal rate of over 50 per cent. This rate of tax will be reached in America only when the annual income exceeds $44,000, i.e. about £15,000.

A SOCIAL ART

TAX – or should it be tax avoidance – has long been a natural topic of lunch-time conversation among business men. Now, or so a contributor to Punch has suggested, it is a prerequisite of social intercourse at what the contributor describes as 'a top-level soirée'. To display interest in tax avoidance, explains the fictitious Madame Olga to her client – a recently arrived 'foreigner of position and affluence' – is extremely comme il faut. She warns, however, you must not imply that taxes are likely to drive any member of the upper classes abroad. Flight, she explains, is always a duty – for example, one owes it to oneself not to give the Government a penny more than one can help.

Madame Olga suggests that one's partner's attention might be 'grabbed' by an opening gambit on corporation tax, capital gains and export bounties. Madame Olga does not indicate how long such a gambit could be relied upon to engage the partner's attention, but most tax practitioners would doubtless have greater confidence in one or other of the more proven techniques to this particular end.

THE REVENUE EXPLAINS

IT would be idle to pretend that the Inland Revenue has an easy task in maintaining a happy relationship with the public; nevertheless, the staff certainly do their best to attain this almost impossible goal. On the more impersonal level the Revenue, as readers will be aware, publishes a variety of explanatory pamphlets and leaflets expounding particular points of tax and the relevant law. The publication of these documents at intervals is usually publicized in the columns of this and other professional journals, as are the reprints and revised editions thereof.

Experience suggests, however, that not all practitioners are aware of the range of topics covered by such publications, or their availability, and it is felt that it will be helpful to list below those papers which are currently obtainable. None of them is new, though the dates against some indicate recent revisions. It is emphasized that this list is not exhaustive – many explanatory publications, e.g. The Employers' Guide, being issued to taxpayers in the normal course of tax practice. Those enumerated below may be regarded as dealing with special aspects of taxation and are obtainable from the offices indicated.

STAFF FOR TAXES

IT would be surprising if the staff of the Inland Revenue, already seriously burdened, were not to feel that the future holds little attraction for them. The two new taxes proposed by the recently installed Government will certainly create a great deal of work for them, and it seems unlikely that inspectors and their staffs will be able to maintain the same high standards of administration that have characterized their work in the past.

It is noteworthy that in the December issue of Taxes, the official journal of the Inland Revenue Staff Federation, a contributor should comment on the fact that preparatory work leading up to the abolition of Schedule A was more onerous in many ways than the continuance of the tax itself. He is in no doubt that it has been replaced by a new tax considerably more complex.

The same article, which apparently originated in the Cardiff branch, contains an obvious hint to Somerset House that the camel's back needs only the proverbial straw to break it. The contributor goes on to comment on what, in his opinion, is the dual standard of service now rendered to the taxpaying public. By this he means that the affluent taxpayer able to engage expert advice has his affairs dealt with correctly, while the smaller and poorer taxpayer can have no confidence that he is in the same happy position. It will be interesting to see whether such administrative considerations can be overridden in the future.

THE CORPORATION TAX AND INVESTMENT

AN article in The Investment Analyst for December, by two members of the economics department of Courtaulds Ltd, Messrs Alfred & Evans, examines the effects of the proposed corporation tax on investment incentives. The argument is that if companies and shareholders have been expecting to earn 7 per cent net on new investment, the two extreme possibilities which can emerge under the new tax are, (1) that companies continue to earn 7 per cent with shareholders' return falling to about $5\frac{1}{2}$ per cent, and (2) shareholders continue to earn 7 per cent, which implies that companies must earn about $9\frac{1}{2}$ per cent net, i.e. after corporation tax.

To achieve the first, i.e. earnings of 7 per cent on new investment and plant, the authors contend that a company will need either to raise prices or obtain increased investment allowances, i.e. 40 per cent as against 30 per cent at present. If, however, the second alternative is to be achieved, then the change needed would be several times larger than in the first case, and would necessitate a fresh look at depreciation rates and initial allowances as well as the investment allowance.

In the authors' view, unless some counteracting measures are taken, the net effect of the new tax structure will be to reduce the incentive to invest and, furthermore, they believe that it will alter the emphasis away from plant and towards buildings and working capital. Bearing in mind the desire of the present Government to stimulate technical investment, some modification of the corporation tax and/or capital allowances would seem to be necessary.

Weekly Notes

BETTER TRADE FIGURES

THERE was an almost audible sigh of relief when the December trade figures were announced on Monday. They were as good as the optimists dared expect although they were in fact only a straw of the right kind in a very bitter winter wind.

Their outstanding feature was a recovery of exports to record levels. On a seasonally adjusted basis they went up to £381 million. On the other hand, imports fell to £455 million. With re-exports at £13 million the visible adverse trade gap was £61 million, compared with £103 million in November and the fourth quarter average for 1964 of £85 million.

Official opinion is that exports are now set on a gradually rising trend. It will not be possible for the public to get much idea of how the trend is going until the figures are confirmed later this month and some statistics are available of the performance of exports in different markets, and also how far the advance is based on the outstanding performance of a few industries. It is hoped, of course, that there has been an advance over a wide front but this remains to be seen.

It is likely that the import surcharge has not yet had a chance to bite so far as the December figures are concerned. Some advantage from this quarter has therefore still to be reflected in the trade statistics. Altogether, however, there is a mood of cautious optimism developing about the external trade situation.

FOTHERGALE CO LTD – III

LAST Tuesday's episode of this B.B.C.2 series was intended to introduce viewers to network analysis techniques. These exotic methods are currently in vogue with some of the more delivery-date conscious firms in the construction industry, but readers who have not yet caught up with modern business jargon need not despair – they are really the old style production flow-charts dressed up under a more 'chi-chi' title.

To present a readily assimilable explanation of these production planning techniques in a dramatized programme of this nature faces the author and producer with problems on a par with those encountered by their mythical firm, Fothergale Co Ltd, but it is doubtful if they have yet achieved the success they envisage for the manufacturers of 'Castaway' shirts. Probably few viewers encountering network analysis for the first time can say that this programme offered an adequate explanation of its objectives – let alone how they should go about preparing a network chart.

This episode has not allayed our earlier misgivings about the authenticity of Rudyard's approach to the sort of commonplace business situations that face Fothergale's. Management-minded accountants would not deny the value of modern semi-scientific techniques as an aid to decision taking, but it seems as if Rudyard mistakes the statistical shadow for the substance of production control.

It would be more convincing if we saw him occasionally on the factory floor – after all, can he be sure the production bottlenecks are where he says they are? There is no better place to examine production problems than on the shop floor.

TAX REBATE ON EXPORTS

THE Exports Rebates Order (S.I. 1965 No. 34) issued on Tuesday sets out particulars of the repayments that will now be available to exporters in relation to some indirect taxes that have entered into the cost of goods they export.

The Order covers 'goods produced or manufactured in the U.K.', that is, goods of which not less than 20 per cent of the costs of their production is attributable to U.K. materials, labour and overheads.

The rates range between 1 per cent and 3¼ per cent, the main group rates including the following:

1	per cent	: motor spirit etc.
1¼	,,	: woollen fabrics etc.
1½	,,	: coal, footwear, aircraft, etc.
1¾	,,	: clothing, carpets, machinery, etc.
2	,,	: cars, furniture, cutlery, etc.
2¼	,,	: drugs, toys, films, etc.
2½	,,	: chemicals, paints, soaps, etc.
2¾	,,	: tinplate, iron and steel pipes, etc.
3	,,	: iron and steel ingots, etc., china and glassware, etc.
3¼	,,	: crude fertilizers, metalliferous ores, etc.

The Chancellor said the intention of the rebates, which was to help firms keep their prices competitive and thus stimulate exports, would be defeated if firms merely pocketed their rebates and made no effort to expand sales abroad.

The two Customs notices on the operation of the rebates – No. 435 'Schedule of rebates' and No. 436 'How to claim rebates', together with claim forms are available from any Customs and Excise Office.

GIFT FOR DIOCESE CHARITABLE

THERE has long been authority for saying that a gift to a bishop for use in his diocese is charitable (Re Smith, Trevor v. Goodhall ([1934] 51 T.L.R. 108)); likewise a gift to the vicar and churchwardens for the time being of a parish, to be applied as they think fit (Re Garrard, Gordon v. Craigie ([1907] 1 Ch. 382)). The reason behind these decisions is that it is to be inferred from the nature of the gift that it is to be used for the advancement of religion. On the other hand, a gift to a vicar expressed to be 'for parish work' (Farley v. Westminster Bank Ltd ([1939] A.C. 430)) or 'for his benevolent work' (Re Simson, Fowler v. Tinley ([1946] Ch. 299)) is not purely charitable since it may include things which cannot be said to be for the advancement of religion or other purely charitable object.

What of a gift to the Jerusalem and the East Mission 'to be applied at the sole discretion of (the Bishop of Jerusalem) for the general purposes of the diocese'? The Mission in its present form was founded in 1888, its objects being to support such steps as would 'strengthen the contribution of the Anglican Communion to the life and work of the whole Church of God in the Middle East and its witness to men of other faiths. Did the words 'for the general purposes of the diocese' merely indicate that the whole discretion lay with the Bishop, or did they mean that the testator was indicating specific trusts. Mr Justice Plowman adopted the former interpretation and held that the gift was charitable (Re Money's Will Trusts; The Times, January 15th).

CHURCH INCOME

FOURTEEN tables of statistics and an enlarged 'Who's Who' are features of the 1965 edition of the Church of England Year Book now published by the Church Information Office (price 30*s*).

Substantial increases in parochial giving are shown in the table concerned with the sources of income of parochial Church Councils. Ordinary income in 1962 – the latest year covered – was £22,302,729; this compares with a total of £18,784,262 in 1960 and is 66 per cent higher than the 1956 figure of £13,422,380. The overall income, including special appeals, legacies, etc., was £28,282,989 in 1962 (compared with £21,580,750 in 1960). Much of the increase resulted from planned giving schemes; receipts from these schemes and subscriptions under covenant, together with income tax recoverable, totalled £9,220,919 in 1962. The comparable figure for 1960 was £6,150,971 and for 1956 £2,577,401.

The enlarged 'Who's Who' section of the Year Book covers seventy-one pages. It includes Church Assembly members (up to November 1964) as well as suffragan bishops, deacons and archdeacons and members of main Church Assembly Boards and Councils who are not also Church Assembly members. Other sections give full lists of the principal clergy and lay officers for every diocese.

TWO LITTLE NEDDIES

IT was announced last week that two industries had put economic development committees to work in the second week of January. The first of these was the Electronics Economic Development Committee. This has been the culmination of a fairly controversial series of discussions in which part of the electronics industry has made it quite clear that it did not relish being responsible to too many Government departments.

The Economic Committee for the Distributive Trades met hard upon the announcements by certain multiple shops that they would not increase their prices. The committee welcomed action being taken to discourage price increases.

It agreed on three recommendations. These were

EXTRA EFFICIENCY FROM BUSINESS TRAVEL

They use British Rail Travel Warrants

"Travel Warrants? Indispensable!" says Charles Charie, Sales Administrator of Gibbs Pepsodent. "I can organise and control all the journeys of our people any time, anywhere. They don't have to worry about cash or travel expenses. I simply post off the warrants they want. We can take care of individuals, small area parties, or bigger sales meetings. It's really very simple! And it all comes back into the one account and there's no extra cost. By a special concession we can also book reservations for sleepers and Pullmans over the 'phone. That's very useful."

The Travel Warrant Plan is designed to simplify business travel. All your rail travel goes on one account—rendered weekly. You get credit, and you can keep an accurate check on travel expenses. Over 5,000 firms use the Travel Warrant Plan already. If you'd like fuller details, send the coupon below.

A WORD TO ACCOUNTANTS. Travel Warrants mean the effective financial control of travelling expenses. A single account for all rail travel. Easier auditing of expense accounts. No heavy cash advances. Saving of time and trouble for accounts staff.

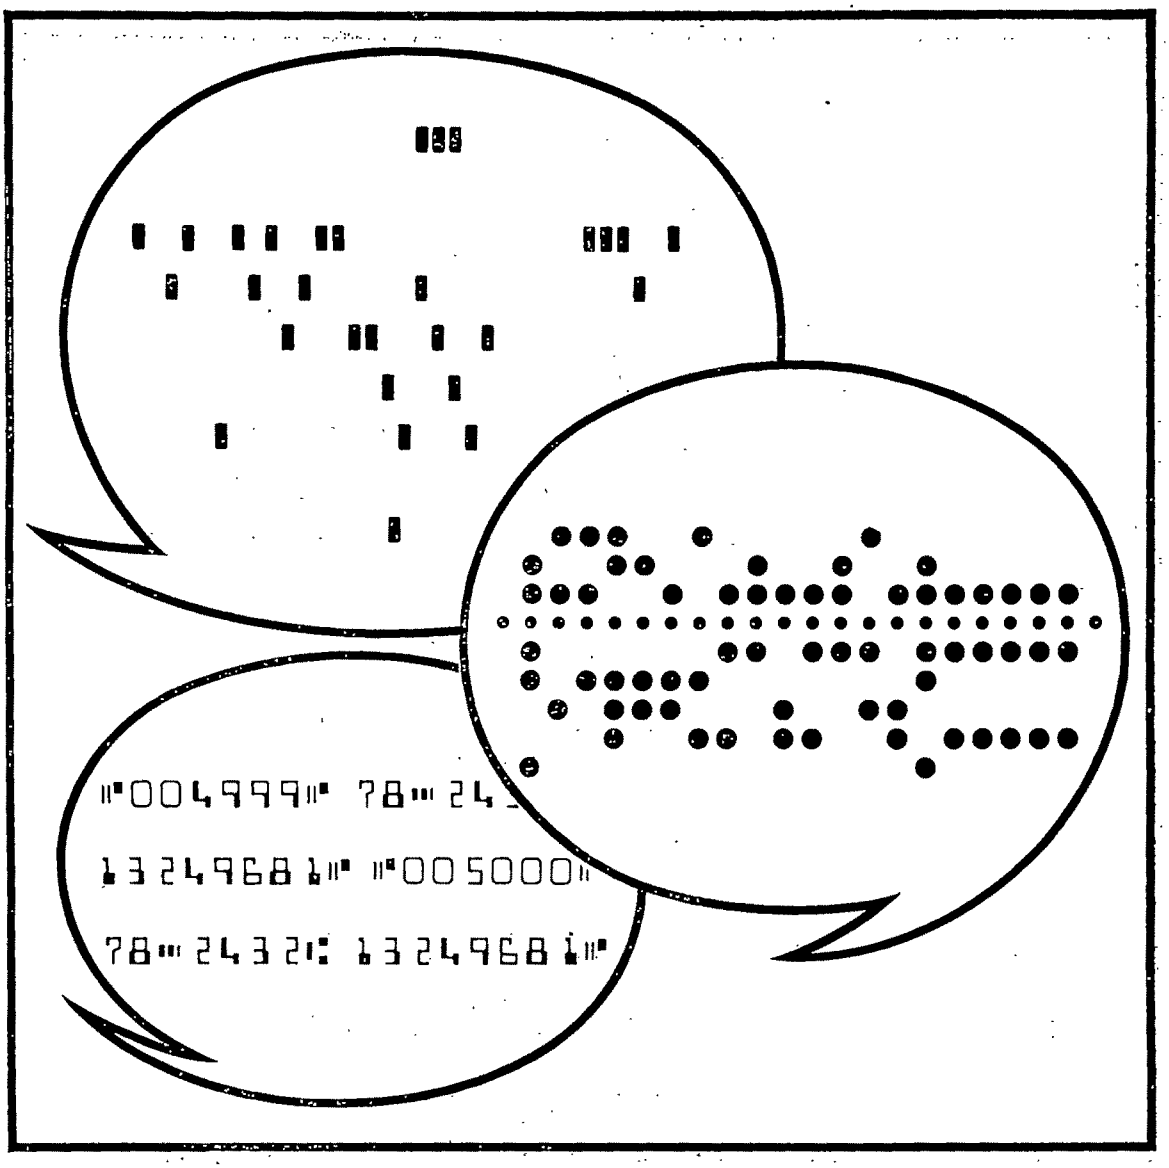
WE'RE ON SPEAKING TERMS WITH EVERY COMPUTER

NCR equipment speaks every type of computer language—punched tape or cards, magnetic characters or optical characters.



A computer is only as good as the information it receives. So to make sure it works at peak efficiency it must be fed with completely accurate information prepared at the lowest cost.

NCR achieves this through its wide and unique range of input preparation equipment. Facts recorded on NCR adding machines, accounting machines or cash registers are simultaneously converted to paper tape (or other forms of input) in one fast, automatic, self-checking operation. This breaks the language barrier between recording machine and computer.

Automation starts the moment the first essential printed record is made—the benefits of electronic data processing are no longer eroded by errors and high hidden costs.

And because NCR input preparation requires neither special skill nor extra effort it gives even small businesses a 'direct line' to a computing centre. Thousands of firms throughout the world are now proving the remarkable speed and economy of 'input by NCR'.

NCR speaks the language of computers. You should speak to NCR—today.

NCR have a unique range of business equipment that can keep you ahead of your competitors—Adding and Accounting Machines, Cash Registers, Input Preparation Equipment, Electronic Computers . . . first to set up as a matter of urgency an Industrial Training Board for the distributive trades. Second, a booklet on stock control in distribution should be prepared for small traders. Third, capital allowances should be extended to commercial premises. It also asked the Board of Trade to examine the idea of setting up Government-sponsored shops to promote the sale of British goods abroad.

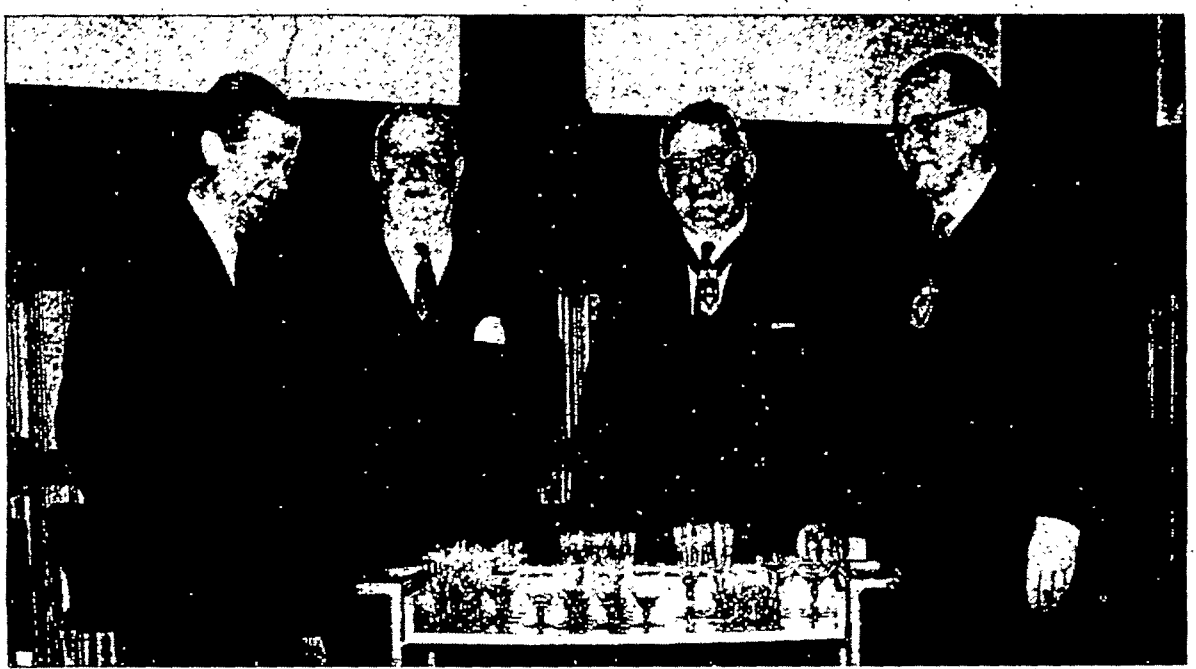
The committee is also studying two other questions. First, what is the reason for the recent popularity of foreign goods in British shops. Second, how better use of manpower can be achieved in the trade.

LONG AND DEVOTED SERVICE



AT the annual dinner of The Certified Accountants' London and District Society held last Saturday at the House of Commons (by courtesy of Mr William Clark, M.P., F.A.C.C.A.), a set of Waterford glasses was presented to Mr E. T. Westmacott, F.A.C.C.A., to mark his recent retirement after forty years as Secretary of the Society.

Mr R. Statham, C.B.E., J.P., F.A.C.C.A., President of the Association, who made the presentation on behalf of the Council, paid tribute to Mr Westmacott's long years of devoted service as Secretary and wished him and Mrs Westmacott good health and happiness in the future.

In reply, Mr Westmacott thanked the Council for their kindness in making the presentation to him. In future, he said, he would be able to drink the health of the Association in everything from champagne to Coca Cola! He referred to the early days of the London Society and said that between the wars the most popular annual social event that he used to organize was the smoking concert. In those days he used to book artists like Arthur Askey and Elsie and Doris Waters for a few guineas per engagement. Times had changed. He also related how G. K. Chesterton had been a speaker at one of the Society's annual dinners and recounted an amusing anecdote arising from G.K.'s visit. In conclusion, Mr Westmacott wished his successor, Mr D. V. Bull, A.A.C.C.A., and the London and District Society all success for the future.

Earlier, in proposing the toast of the London and District Society, Mr Statham said that there were greater opportunities than ever before in accountancy because it was universally recognized that accountants were one of the main tools of management.

One of the major troubles today was the plethora of economists without any real practical experience. Another was the fact that Governments, even so-called enlightened ones, failed to realize that accountants were the backbone of finance and, in consequence, failed to make use of, for the good of the country as a whole, the benefit of the cumulative knowledge of the accountancy profession. However, said Mr Statham, the public still looked to the accountancy profession for a lead – witness the growing, unprecedented demand for the services of accountants – but successive Governments had failed to utilize this important pool of knowledge and experience for the benefit of the country.

HOUSEKEEPER DECISION REVERSED

THE Court of Appeal on Tuesday allowed the Crown appeal in Barentz v. Whiting from the decision of Ungoed-Thomas, J. The decision turned on the construction of section 214 of the Income Tax Act, 1952, which grants to a widower (or widow) a personal allowance in respect of a female person employed either as a housekeeper or for the purpose of having the charge and care of children. The female person must be a relative, unless no relative is available.

It is clear that, to qualify, the relative must be resident with the claimant. What was not clear was whether a non-relative must also be resident with the claimant.

It has now been held, according to The Times of January 20th, that she, too, must be resident. The question whether the female person in the present case did have the charge and care of the claimant's children did not arise, since it was agreed that she was not resident.

THERE'S so much talk about management accounting these days – 'Get a detailed report to the managing director immediately . . . highlight the marginal cost incremental-wise . . . stress the negative variation from the norm . . . analyse the ton-miles pound-wise as percentages of net turnover . . .' that it comes as quite a shock – indeed, almost a relief – to meet one of the old breed of accountant again; the type to whom a trial balance which balanced at first tot, after provisions, reserves, accruals, pre-paids, and taxation allocations had all been adjusted, was an end in itself.

I once knew a stoop-shouldered, peering old auditor to whom the brass-locked private ledger was a joy; to rule it off in red double-lines gave him an obvious glow of satisfaction. None of your new-fangled nonsense for him. He cared nothing for the myriad messages to be gleaned from the trading account by the general manager; in fact, he was rather jealous of that worthy's stubby forefinger dabbing at his immaculate pages with queries. He had succeeded in becoming one hundred per cent task-mesmerized. The completion of accurate final accounts was his ultimate aim.

I thought of him recently when our assistant departmental accountant suddenly reverted to type. This able young man had the job of preparing the draft quarterly accounts for each of our trading departments. He assembled the routine figures for opening stocks, purchases, sales and estimated (and sometimes actual) closing stocks, and reported on the resulting profits in both pounds and percentages. We knew to a hair what those percentages should be. His multi-coloured charts of graphed statistics over the year caused a furore among top management at the unexpected variations. After sitting in on our exploratory discussions he was dispatched to the salesmen to ask for preliminary explanations.

A responsible and interesting job, I thought it. He was at the very heart of the marketing side of the business; in close touch with the top executives, a trusted trouble-shooter, acquiring invaluable knowledge and experience. The fabled field-marshal's baton was obviously rattling round in his knapsack. I said as much to him in congratulatory style and much to my surprise he nearly exploded with indignation. He went crimson in the face as he tried to explain himself.

'All this caper of watching purchase invoices and sales prices is no job for a qualified accountant,' he growled. 'It's all right for some poor ruddy skinflint of a merchant, huckstering round grubby old warehouses picking up bargains and buying "seconds" at cut prices. Who cares about mark-ups or written-down shop-soiled stocks? Not me! I'm an accountant. I should be writing up the private ledger; calculating accrued commitments and debits to profit and loss account or to reserves.'

I pointed out that he actually did calculate the more important figures; their mere physical entry was a job for the girl on machine-posting work. This comment enraged him. 'The girl's doing the senior accountant's work and I'm doing junior stuff. The private ledger should be my assignment, not her's. She's the first to see the net profits in her machine register's balance column, and that's all wrong; they should be confidential to us accountants till you authorize us to report them.'

He wouldn't accept that handwritten entries or actual subtractions were impractical in view of the sheer volume of items to be posted and that the job was a 'must' for machine-posting. The traditional mystique of the private ledger was a status symbol to him, altogether too important for inferior females to handle.

I resolved to find a book on the suffragette movement to lend him, to teach him more sense about feminine talents . . . but somehow his attitude was rather refreshing. (Though he'll probably have a breakdown when we get that computer).

Period Planning and Budgetary Control

by E. C. D. EVANS, B.SC.(ECON.), F.A.C.C.A., A.C.I.S., A.M.B.I.M. (Macdonald & Evans Ltd, London. 10*s* 6*d* and 12*s* 6*d* respectively.)

The author of these two books is Director of Accountancy Studies and Principal Lecturer in the Department of Management at Slough College. He is also director of that College's Management Accounting Research Unit, and these two attractively-produced books are volumes one and two, respectively, in a new 'Pillars of Management Accounting Series' of the publishers. The short chapters – some only half a page long – are helpful as simple introductions to the subjects covered; the best portions undoubtedly being those that deal with the well-trodden ground of general elements, e.g. business forecasting, cash budgets, the master budget, control organization, the cost of costing.

Unfortunately, however, these books are weak on the all-important matters of techniques, particularly so in the illustrations. The major example on standard costing, which incorporates budgetary control, gives calculations for nine different variances. The first is a sales volume variance calculated on the difference between the budgeted and actual quantities sold, multiplied by the whole of the standard selling price, instead of a multiplier consisting of the standard profit margin. Having committed himself to this approach, the author then has to juggle with the remaining variances in order to get the correct total variance.

Amongst the remaining variances is one for material usage due to under-production, being the standard cost of the material not used due to the drop in output. The budget for variable overhead has not been flexed and there is no variance for the under-recovery of the fixed overhead. It is puzzling, to say the least, to find that some of the variances mentioned in this example are dealt with correctly when referred to singly elsewhere in the two volumes.

Other shortcomings are found in the techniques described for transport costing, calendar variances and scrap and rework variances. Most books on standard costing and unfortunately most exponents, including Mr Evans, try to lose the budgeted costs of scrap and rework as one of the expense budgets, with peculiar results.

One cannot help being perturbed at the generally low standard of knowledge of most industrial accountants of the finer, but still important, techniques of standard costing and budgetary control. People in other disciplines, such as taxation and engineering, generally have a better grasp of the intricacies of their subjects. When we are so much in need of good material on the techniques of costing, it is a great pity that we should go on adding to the collection of books that do not take us in the right direction.

Profit Planning and the Measurement of Return on Capital Employed by E. C. D. EVANS, B.SC.(ECON.), F.A.C.C.A., A.C.I.S., A.M.B.I.M. (Macdonald & Evans Ltd, London. 12*s* 6*d*.)

This is volume three in the author's 'Pillars of Management Accounting Series' reviewed above, and there is no doubt that a higher standard is reached in this work than in the preceding volumes, though the claim that it is offered as a 'sophisticated guide' to business men etc. is over-generous.

Most of the profit-planning topics are covered in straightforward terms – profit measurements, concepts of capital employed, effects of inflation, hire or lease, mathematical devices for evaluating the rate of return on capital employed, taxation effects, evaluation of capital expenditure proposals and, of course, budgeting for profit. Anyone not previously familiar with these techniques could well benefit from a study of these chapters.

The author makes extensive use of economic indices in his examples on the revaluation of assets at replacement values, but he gives no warning that the danger in this approach is that a general index does not take into account technological improvements. In many industries, a given amount of capital expenditure will produce a higher output than was obtainable from the same expenditure several years ago.

It is surprising that the book deals only sketchily with ratio analysis. Reference is made to a percentage return on capital employed and, by implication, to the percentage return on sales; but the assets to sales ratio is ignored completely. One cannot imagine a true-to-life profit planning exercise that does not take a close look at the rate of turnover of assets.

These criticisms apart, this book is good value for money and should set many profit-planners on the right path.

Law for the Retailer

by J. R. LEWIS, LL.B., A.C.C.S., DIP. ED. (Allman & Son Ltd, London. 12*s* 6*d*.)

Although primarily intended for students of the retail trade examinations, the scope of this book is far wider than might at first be supposed; it merits consideration as an introduction to mercantile law for accountancy students.

In subjects not aligned to originality, it covers in a sparkling text a detailed outline of the law of contract, including the sale of goods, and that governing relations with employees and third parties. Intended for novices, it gives a general introduction to law and the historical background to legal procedures. The text is well documented with both recent and traditional cases relegated to an attractive and well-referenced appendix. Thus, crisply and succinctly,

Its claims as a practical book can only be justified in that the student fixes his mind on practical applications, the retail trade being pertinent in that it supplies the most tangible demonstrations. As a teacher, the author appreciates the student's psychology of 'pegging' his thoughts for learning and recalling and thus he mostly avoids the tabulated lists so meaningless to the novice; yet in places the text could be further enhanced by still more practical demonstrations. But to the layman it cannot be of use as a practical book; its section on incorporation fails – yet another book is misleading on this topic and perpetuates common fallacies; procedures in bankruptcy and liquidation are not mentioned; restraint of trade is sketchy and vague – unfortunate in this subject ever mystifying to the student.

Even if marred by the occasional slang, the chatty and readable text will capture and hold the interest of the student with no previous background knowledge and the book is recommended as an introduction to these technical subjects before proceeding to the heavier and more formal textbooks.

Taxation Case

A full report of the case summarized in this column will be published, with Notes on the Judgment, in the 'Annotated Tax Cases'.

Finsbury Securities Ltd v. Bishop

In the High Court of Justice (Chancery Division)

(Before Mr Justice BUCKLEY)

Income tax – Loss – Claim for adjustment – Share-dealing company – Dividend-stripping – Forward-stripping – Whether acquisition of shares a trading operation – Income Tax Act, 1952, section 341 – Finance (No. 2) Act, 1955, Schedule 3, paragraphs 4, 5.

On December 29th, 1958, the appellant, a share-dealing company, acquired the one hundred preferred shares in another company (Warshaw) at the price of £60,100, of which £20,100 was payable forthwith and the balance not later than December 31st, 1960. These shares carried a dividend of 6 per cent and the right to a sum each accounting period to 1963 equal to the profit of the period, computed in a particular way, but subject to a total of £60,000 for all those periods. The sale agreement provided for the purchase price to be adjusted by reference to a decrease in dividends paid on the shares on or before December 31st, 1964, and by reference to the amount that the appellant might receive in receipt of a loss claim not later than December 31st, 1966. During 1959 this particular sale was abandoned.

On February 20th, 1959, the appellant company agreed to buy all the one hundred issued shares in another company (Mantern Ltd) for £100 and a further sum, if any, equal to 85 per cent of the net profits of Mantern earned up to March 31st, 1960. The sale agreement also provided for the vendors to purchase or procure the purchase of assets of Mantern unsold at March 1st, 1960. The appellant, by a supplemental agreement, covenanted with the sellers of the shares that it would procure that Mantern would pay a dividend equal to the whole of its net profit up to March 31st, 1960, after deducting tax at the standard rate and would pay an equal sum to the vendors, this sum was to be in reduction of the further sum already mentioned. The appellant was to pay the balance of the further sum when, but not unless, the appellant obtained a reduction in its income tax in respect of the dividend pursuant to a claim under section 341 of the Income Tax Act, 1952.

The appellant was not in a position to finance these transactions, and the vendors agreed verbally that the further payments should be made as and when dividends from the companies enabled the appellant to pay them.

The appellant company entered into twelve transactions on the Warshaw pattern, and three transactions on the Mantern pattern.

It was contended by the respondent that the shares bought by the appellant did not become trading stock of its trade as a share dealer; and, alternatively, if the shares did become trading stock of that trade, the dividends received on the shares in the various companies should be treated as receipts of that trade and brought into account accordingly. The result would be that no loss could be established by the appellant. For the appellant it was contended that the transactions in question were operations of its trade as a share dealer; that the dividends in question should not be brought in as trade receipts; and that it was entitled to repayment, under section 341, in respect of the loss it made when it sold the shares in question.

The Special Commissioners decided in favour of the appellant on both points, and directed that the figures should be agreed. Before their final determination was made, the case of F.S. Securities Ltd v. Commissioners of Inland Revenue was decided in the Court of Appeal, and the Special Commissioners reversed their decision on the second point, and rejected the claim. Later the decision of the Court of Appeal was reversed in the House of Lords and the only remaining point in dispute was whether the shares in question were part of the trading stock of the appellant as a share dealer.

Held: the decision of the Special Commissioners was correct on that point, and that the claim should be allowed.

Fell (Holdings)

THE accounts of Fell (Holdings) Ltd, which form the subject of this week's reprint, are best introduced in the words of Lord Morris, the chairman. Opening his statement with the accounts he says that the information presented 'follows without deviation the recommendations of the Proceedings of the Second Congress of the European Federation of Financial Analysts' Societies, and by so doing conforms to an objective standard set to achieve the highest possible consistent disclosure of a company's affairs'.

'Coupled with the decision to adopt these standards', Lord Morris adds, 'your board has also decided to publish each quarter a précis of its accounts. Together, these steps comply with the main requirements indicated recently by the chairman of the London Stock Exchange.'

When the accounts were being prepared it was debated whether the separate accounts of the company's various subsidiaries should be included. The conclusion was that no useful purpose would be served by so doing. 'Together the companies in each unit fulfil the same functions', Lord Morris explains. The explanation of the differing organizations 'lies in the history of the units before they were acquired by your company, and it is important to retain their separate identities in their historical form in order to preserve the valuable goodwill and local traditions each has built up in its own area.'

The Organization

The Fell organization operates in the fields of building contracting and estate and commercial development. Such civil engineering as the group does is restricted in order to support the organization needed for its other activities.

The group is operated in two units. The North-eastern unit consists of Fell Construction Co Ltd, building contractors; Lawefield Estates Ltd, private estate developers; Fell Property Investments Ltd, commercial and industrial developers; and a 75 per cent holding in Fell & Hall (Electrical Engineers) Ltd, electrical contractors. There are two other companies – Felcon Ltd and Trend Developments Ltd – but they are dormant.

The Midlands unit consists of Adkins & Shaw (Builders and Contractors) Ltd, and Plant Hire Facilities Ltd, which provides plant for Adkins & Shaw. Since the date of the accounts, the share capital of Albert Scott Ltd has been bought for £32,500 cash. The Scott company's business is that of general plumbers and heating engineers and about 60 per cent of its turnover represents work done for the Fell Group.

Details of the Scott acquisition are contained in an appendix to the main report. The accounts can be left to speak for themselves in terms of detail and clarity, but it can be said that the effort put into their form and presentation reflects a high level of efficiency within the organization.

Budget

Efficiency is also reflected in Lord Morris's budgeting forecasts. A year ago he forecast a turnover of £4 million based on budgetary figures submitted to him and the accuracy of those figures can be seen from the accounts. The pre-tax profit of £446,934 exceeded the budget forecast by some £22,000.

Breaking down the turnover figure, £2,513,143 was accounted for by the North-eastern unit and £1,552,212 by the Midlands unit. In terms of commercial and industrial development projects, turnover was £365,082, with £2,866,861 arising from estate development and £833,412 from negotiated and other contracts. For the first time in its history the company built and sold over one thousand houses.

This year the plan is to complete and sell some eleven hundred houses and total turnover is budgeted at over £5 million leading to pre-tax earnings of £475,000. On that basis the projected current year dividends are an interim of 12½ per cent to be followed by a 17½ per cent final payment, making 30 per cent in all on capital being increased by a '1 for 4' scrip issue.

Memory does not readily recall such a precise dividend forecast as that, particularly by a company operating in a sphere in which availability of finance can upset calculations and bad weather can play havoc with building schedules.

Land Stock

In addition to the house building and sale programme, the company anticipates shortly the sale of a completed commercial scheme at Horsforth, Yorkshire. Another scheme at Wakefield is expected to be completed during the year. At the company's first large industrial development at Wakefield, some five acres out of a total area of thirty acres have been sold.

Land for development purposes is currently no real problem and the company can face a period of about five years of planned development without exhausting land stocks. One problem, however, is the capacity of building societies to provide mortgage facilities to meet increased demand. In some estates on which the company is working, mortgages are mainly provided by the appropriate local authority but there must be some uncertainty on that score under present conditions.

It may be noted, however, that the turnover expansion of the year under review was financed without recourse to the additional capital resources which estate and commercial development demands.

CITY NOTES

THE reduction of £42 million in the trade gap in December, while being welcomed as a belated pointer in the right direction, has not inspired the City to any great display of strength in the financial markets. Neither the 15 per cent import duty surcharge nor the November export incentives can be held responsible for the December drop in imports and rise in exports.

The January and February trade figures are the crucial ones. What the December trade figures have done is to put some kind of peg in the foreign exchange and stock-markets, and the tender rally in both could go a shade further.

Strength in sterling, however, need not necessarily find a parallel in the stock-market. There, the effects of the credit squeeze, particularly during the early-year period of pressure on bank resources during the taxpaying season, have yet to be fully appreciated let alone felt.

* * * *

LIEUT-COL T. MARSHALL BROOKS, chairman of District Bank, this week urged a reduction of Bank rate and an easing of credit restrictions at the earliest possible moment lest the present restriction of credit caused too great a degree of deflation.

Pressure on bank resources is a common theme in this year's reviews by bank chairmen. That situation should not be overlooked in assessing the likely course of the stock-market in the months ahead.

Sir Cuthbert Clegg, chairman of Martins Bank, comments that the 'recent guidance' from the Bank of England 'will serve to endorse publicly the need to channel the bank's limited lending resources into those sectors of the economy which are of the greatest national interest'.

Mr John Thomson, chairman of Barclays Bank, insists that the bank will lend money 'to those who will use it to design and produce at the right price, goods which overseas customers want' but admits that 'the restrictive side of what we are not supposed to call a squeeze is much less pleasant'.

However, the chairman of Midland Bank, Sir Archibald Forbes, considers that there would be no reason for uneasiness if the proportion of bank advances to deposits rose further.

* * * *

THE Woolworth results for 1964, reported, it may be noted, eighteen days after the end of the financial year, were a thinking point for the stock-market. A modest rise in trading profits was more than offset by higher depreciation charges stemming from the 1963 property revaluation and by increased tax charges. The Woolworth dividend is equivalently maintained at 20 per cent from lower net earnings. In the present context of pressure on margins, pressure against price increases and, also, of eager anticipation of asset revaluations, the Woolworth results should lead to some deep thinking.

* * * *

THE new issue market is livening up. Outstanding success was achieved by the London County Council's £50 million operation in short-dated and long-dated stocks, with both issues commanding a premium of over one point on the par issue price. This week a number of offers for sale and share placings have been successfully concluded.

The L.C.C.'s success may bring a run of corporation issues and fair response to share offers for sale could lead to the early launching of a number of such operations known to be 'on the stocks'.

Notes and Notices

Notification of Examination Results

Subject to unforeseen circumstances, lists of candidates successful at the November 1964 old Intermediate and Final examinations will be displayed at the temporary offices of The Institute of Chartered Accountants in England and Wales, 56/66 Goswell Road, London EC1 (not Moorgate Place), on Tuesday, February 2nd. The results will be published in The Accountant of February 20th.

In addition each candidate may expect to receive by post at the earliest on Monday, February 1st, a notice stating whether he has passed or failed, together with details including any prize awarded or, if unsuccessful, particulars of his performance in individual papers.

The Institute state that they cannot give information of results by telephone or telegram and cannot entertain any inquiry as to whether results are available.

THE CHARTERED ACCOUNTANTS' BENEVOLENT ASSOCIATION

At a recent meeting of the Executive Committee of The Chartered Accountants' Benevolent Association, the chair was taken by Mr F. J. B. Gardner, F.C.A., in the absence of the President, and ten members were present.

Applications for Assistance

Twelve new applications for assistance were considered, two of which related to the Special Fund for non-qualified staff with long service in a member's office. In three cases it was decided to make a donation and a grant, in two cases a donation only, in two cases a grant only and in two cases to nominate for places in a home of Crossways Trust; assistance was refused in three cases.

One of the nominations for places in a home was for a member and his wife, both in their eighties, who had been found in a distressed state on the floor of their flat. The other nomination was for a member over 70 whose wife had recently died after a long illness.

Twenty-five applications for further assistance were considered; twenty-three grants were renewed, one was reduced and one deferred pending further information.

Matters Reported

Changes in circumstances were reported in thirteen other cases and grants were adjusted or donations made. The deaths of two beneficiaries were reported.

Included in the donations reported was the sum of £196 received from a number of friends of the late Percy Carpenter as a tribute in lieu of flowers.

ANNUAL ABSTRACT OF STATISTICS

The 1964 edition of the Annual Abstract of Statistics, (H.M. Stationery Office, price £1 2*s* 6*d*), prepared by the Central Statistical Office in collaboration with the statistics divisions of Government departments, brings together statistics relating to the social and economic affairs of the United Kingdom and gives annual figures, so far as they are available, for each of the years 1953 to 1963. Some of the tables include figures for the early months of 1964. The new edition contains 381 tables of official statistics covering a wide range of subjects such as national income and expenditure, banking, insurance, education and prices. There are also five new tables providing figures on population, labour, agriculture and food, transport and overseas finance.

Other changes involve the addition of new series to existing tables and some substantial revisions, e.g. the tables on public expenditure on social services and housing have been extended to cover the years 1949–50 to 1963–64.

BRITISH COUNCIL'S ANNUAL REPORT

Four-fifths of the British Council's work is now directed towards the developing countries, according to its report for 1963–64.

The Council, which was founded in 1934, then had a budget of £5,000; in the current financial year this has grown to £10,686,000. The increase of £1,426,000 over last year's budget is being used to expand English language teaching, including the production of television films in co-operation with the B.B.C. The Council's work in Western Europe, the report states, is being extended as, too, are its library services, which now issue four million books a year.

The Council also administers £2 million on behalf of the Ministry of Overseas Development, and the report emphasizes the close working relationship between the two bodies. This is particularly true of the arrangements for training overseas people in Britain and the recruitment of British teachers for service overseas.

WHY DUPLEXTRA SAFES GIVE EVEN GREATER SECURITY

Chatwood-Milner keep ahead of the increasing severity of today's attack on safes, and have designed this new type with a special anti-blowpipe and drill-resisting armour cast in one piece. They increased the thickness of the door, revised existing locking mechanisms and boltwork, and fitted an improved device that gives automatic protection against explosives. Then came really drastic tests. These showed that the new Duplextra range of Anti-Blowpipe Safes outdo even their predecessors. They have greater resistance to blowpipe, drill and explosives.

SALARIES AND LOCATIONS

Advertisers are invited to state in their advertisements the approximate salary range that they are prepared to give or require, and also their geographical location.

This will greatly assist those who propose answering advertisements and possibly avoid much unnecessary correspondence between advertisers and applicants.

CONDITIONS OF ACCEPTANCE OF CLASSIFIED ADVERTISEMENTS

1. The publishers cannot guarantee insertion on any specified date, but every effort is made to comply with advertisers' requirements.
2. The publishers will not be held liable for any loss occasioned by the failure of any advertisement to appear from any cause whatsoever.
3. The publishers will not accept responsibility for printing errors which may appear or for any consequences arising therefrom.
4. Box number addresses must not be used for the receipt of original documents, goods or payments of any kind, nor are they available for the distribution of canvassing matter. Any letter is liable to be opened for examination of its contents.
5. The right is reserved to refuse, cancel, suspend publication, or alter any advertisement which in the opinion of the publishers does not conform with recognized professional standards.

would have provided a plan-holder, aged 44, today with life cover of £14,535 or a capital sum of £9,861 – for a total investment of £2,400 not taking into account tax relief.

A.V.S.P. is a completely new plan offering the advantages of Unit Trust investment with an exceptional ever increasing family security benefit.

This advertisement has been appearing nationally for some months. We find a great many of our clients rely on the advice of their accountants or taxation advisers. We would therefore invite your attention to the following special features:

CAPITAL GAINS TAX. The contract is written as a with profits insurance policy.

SURTAX. The units purchased, being part of the life fund, surtax payers are not liable for additional tax on the net income.

COLLATERAL. Full whole life cover from inception plus the units purchased give a growing collateral year by year.

INVESTMENT THROUGH SAVE & PROSPERS' INVESTMENT-TRUST-UNITS

You can be assured in that the investment element of the plan is with one of the oldest and most successful Unit Trusts in this country – Investment-Trust-Units – part of the Save and Prosper Group whose funds exceed £150 million.

POP ACCOUNTANCY

We have the modern approach

We believe that professional firms must keep abreast of the latest trends and techniques if they are to provide an adequate and up-to-date service to clients in the 1970s.

Our management services division and our audit division are equipping themselves to face this technological explosion.

Alongside this, our trustee and investment advisory departments are streamlining their work to provide services more in keeping with the computer age in which we live.

These services can only be provided with adequate manpower and we are recruiting through our audit division a team of energetic young chartered accountants who are prepared to accept the challenge and to make their contribution to the economic progress of this country.

Are you interested?

We pay progressive salaries. Salaries depend on progress. Progress should be rapid.

If you are qualified or a November finalist and between 23 and 28 apply as soon as possible to Box PA7269.

FINANCIAL CONTROLLER

The Shipbuilding Industry Training Board, which has been set up under the Industrial Training Act, 1964, invites applications from qualified accountants, preferably A.C.W.A. with recent industrial experience for the pensionable post of Financial Controller. A knowledge of industrial training techniques themselves is not necessary: but first-hand experience of financing industrial training schemes will be an advantage.

Working under the Chief Executive, the financial controller will be responsible to the board for all the board's financial activities. These will include the assessment and collection of the levy on employers as decided annually by the board: the payment of grants to employers who are carrying out training approved by the board; and control of the day-to-day administrative expenses of the board.

The board's policy on levy and grants has not yet been decided; the financial controller will be expected to play his part in helping the board to formulate such a policy and, subsequently to build up whatever accounting organization is needed to implement it.

The salary offered is in the range of £2,000–£2,500 per annum according to age and experience, but a higher salary might be agreed if the board considered an applicant to be exceptionally well qualified for the post.

Application forms are available from the Secretary.

Closing date: February 15th, 1965.

NEWLY QUALIFIED ACCOUNTANTS

It is generally accepted that on becoming a qualified accountant a move is not only desirable but an essential part of career planning. The inevitable question will arise as to where appropriate post-qualification experience can be acquired. As a result of many years' connection with the profession and commercial organizations, we are in a particularly favourable position to answer this question for you. Your career record and aspirations will be considered by one of our directors and, in the light of our experience and knowledge, you will be advised as to where the right experience can be gained. Our service eliminates the necessity of replying to advertisements and box numbers which are frequently frustrating, time wasting and abortive. The element of risk in taking the 'wrong path' is eliminated. You are invited to telephone or write for an appointment for a

CAREER DISCUSSION

Our advice will be impartial, objective and confidential. No charge is made for this service and no obligation is incurred. Our reward is goodwill and recommendation which repays us a hundredfold.

THE POST OF THE WEEK

We come, once again, to advertise the post of management accountant, management accountancy being, as all know, probably the most misused and ill-applied words in accountancy. We hope that, after the details of this particular position have been outlined, the duties involved will be clearer to the inexperienced.

We are, however, after an experienced A.C.A., A.A.C.C.A., or A.C.W.A. for a client in the cosmetics field based in North London. Candidates should be in the age group 25–40.

The man selected will be required to control cost and financial implications of projects ranging through manufacturing to distribution. Modern techniques in accountancy are already in use. He will be responsible to the general manager (Finance and Services Division).

The prospects are bright and the salary range starts at £2,000 p.a.

Over the week-end your computer capacity can grow by 80%

(One of the advantages of Compatibles/400 from De La Rue Bull)

WHEN you buy a Compatibles/400 computer from De La Rue Bull you buy a computer that can grow with you. One short week-end is all the time needed to step up to a larger Compatibles/400 system — and each upward step increases computer capacity by 80%.

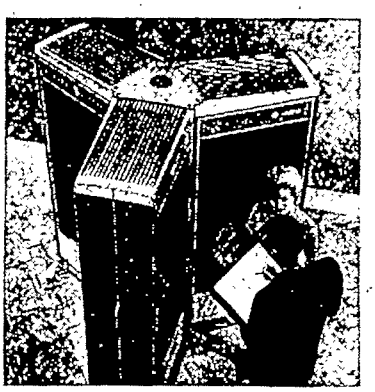
User-Designed

Compatibles/400 are designed and manufactured by General Electric of U.S.A., and incorporate all their research and experience as one of the world's largest and most experienced commercial users of computers.

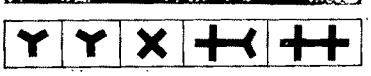
User Advantages

Compatibles/400—not just one computer, but five powerful systems, with compatible processors, compatible peripherals, compatible programmes.

This means practically unlimited growth potential.



No need to modify programmes when you increase computer capacity.



No need to change input/output units.

No need to retrain your computer personnel.

Already Operating

Already more than 30 Compatibles/400 have been installed and are working on customers' premises in Europe and America — within one year of their first announcement. This remarkable achievement provides you with visible evidence of outstanding machine performance.

GE 415 GE 425 GE 435 GE 455 GE 465

Software in use

Compatibles/400 software exists—in customer installations. Without built-in aids of this kind, programming may represent a high proportion of your installation costs. And software, backing up computers of advanced design, provides maximum throughput for you, the user.

10-month Delivery

Your own Compatibles/400 can be delivered, and working with your own trained staff, in just 10 months—far sooner than any other comparable third generation computer.

In three volumes

An Introduction to Cost Accountancy

Important new printings covering all cost accountancy

by R. WARWICK DOBSON,
C.A., F.C.W.A.
Silver Medallist of the Institute of Cost and Works Accountants

Vol. I – COSTING AND COST CONTROL (Revised First Edition)

This volume is devoted entirely to cost ascertainment and cost control. It deals with the historical, standard and marginal costing techniques and with uniform costing, budgetary control, and cost improvement. It describes in addition to the methods of evaluating the factors of production, the methods of analysing and classifying costs for control purposes. It concentrates on the essentials by leaving to other volumes the forms and appliances used in recording cost data.

'. . . The books can be thoroughly recommended, not only to the student of cost accountancy but also to the accountant in industry. . . .' – Times Review of Industry.

Price 37s 6d net.

Vol. II – THE ELEMENTS OF COST ACCOUNTING (Second Edition)

Attention is directed in this volume to the fundamentals of the mechanics of cost accounting – the organization of cost accounting departments, the machines and appliances which may be used (with many illustrations), the design of the forms on which records are made, and the construction of procedure records and manuals of instruction. Two chapters are devoted to cost book-keeping and an example of integral accounts. The fundamentals of preparation and the presentation of cost information to management and the audit of costs are the subjects of the remaining chapters.

'. . . The three volumes taken together give the reader a detailed exposition of a very important subject, and the author is justified in claiming that his work is fuller than any previously published in this country. . . .' – The Engineer.

Price 37s 6d net.

Vol. III – COST RECORDING AND PRESENTATION (Reprinted First Edition)

The many methods by which the process of cost accounting is in practice carried out are profusely illustrated and described. Short-cut methods and up-to-date practices are presented to the reader. Each chapter is devoted to one aspect such as materials accounting, wages accounting, cost centre accounting, standard cost accounting, etc. At the same time, each chapter deals with the basic records required, the book-keeping entries involved, and form of presentation of information concerning the particular aspect dealt with in the chapter. By dealing with the details of the cost accounting mechanism in a separate volume, more illustrations have been provided than could otherwise have been possible.

'. . . Now that the work can be read in its entirety, it may be said without qualification that the author has fairly and squarely succeeded in his objective and that he has produced a textbook of real and lasting value to future generations of costing students.' – The Accountant.

Inland Revenue Audit

LAST year the Government discontinued the separate publication of the Revenue Department's Appropriation Accounts and began the practice of including them in a larger volume of Civil Appropriation Accounts (Classes 1–5). These accounts for the year 1963–64 were published last week.[1]

The COMPTROLLER AND AUDITOR-GENERAL last year singled out for comment the fact that the tax borne by a company need bear no relation to the tax recovered by recipients of dividends paid by it out of its profits. This year he deals with the problems thrown up by the late payment by employers of the pay-as-you-earn tax which they have deducted from emoluments paid by them. Under the Income Tax (Employments) Regulations, 1962,[2] an employer is required (subject to certain authorized exceptions) to pay to the Collector of Taxes, within fourteen days after the end of every income tax month, all amounts of tax which he was liable to deduct from emoluments paid by him during that month, less any amounts he was liable to repay to employees. The income tax month ends on the fifth day of the calendar month. Consequently, an employer's monthly payment should, under the rules, be made not later than the nineteenth day of the calendar month in which the income tax month ended. If maximum advantage is taken of the fourteen days' grace period afforded by the regulations, an employer may legitimately retain tax which he has deducted for between two and six weeks before transmitting it to the Revenue.

If he makes no payment to the collector within the permitted period, or the collector is not satisfied that the payment (if any) made represents the full liability, the regulations provide two methods for obtaining the information necessary to ascertain the amount of tax due from the employer and for certifying the liability with a view to proceedings for recovery. First, the collector may, by notice, require the employer to render a return of all his employees with particulars of, e.g., their tax codes and the emoluments paid to them in the current tax year. This system is not much used since it was found (not unnaturally) that normally a personal visit was necessary before the amount due could be quantified. Secondly, since 1962, an authorized officer of the Inland Revenue (a 'deputed collector') may inspect the employer's pay records. However, in practice, this resort to statutory remedies is preceded by a series of reminding letters followed, if necessary, by personal visits. These reminding letters are based on regular monthly reviews of the collectors' ledger records of employers' payments, supplemented by more frequent consideration of special classes such as large employers and also employers who are known to be dilatory with their payments.

At the end of the tax year employers have to make returns showing emoluments paid, and tax deducted, during the year. It is not possible to quantify the total liabilities of employers until their annual returns become available. The Inland Revenue can then calculate, with reasonable accuracy, the total tax liability of employers and the amounts unpaid at the final duty date (April 19th) and onwards. For the tax deduction year 1962–63, when the experience was typical of recent years, the amount outstanding at the final due date from employers other than public departments is estimated to have been £170 million, representing about 12 per cent of the total amount due (approximately £1,425 million). After a further four weeks, eight weeks, and thirteen weeks, the outstandings are estimated to have been about £70 million (5 per cent), £40 million (3 per cent) and £20 million (1½ per cent), respectively. Information obtained by the COMPTROLLER's officers indicated that delays in payment of this order are a regular feature of the P.A.Y.E. scheme. He asked the Inland Revenue whether they considered that their collection procedures were operating satisfactorily and whether they contemplated any further measures to improve P.A.Y.E. collections.

The Inland Revenue agreed that it was unsatisfactory to have large amounts of P.A.Y.E. tax unpaid at the statutory due date. However, the aim of the procedures was not to hasten payment within the period of grace, but to pursue the employer who had not paid by the due date and to reduce the current arrears as speedily as possible. In this respect they were satisfied with their procedures. The percentage arrear at the due date might be on the high side, but it was quickly reduced in the following week and the amount of arrear carried forward in the succeeding month's collection period was comparatively small. The scheme of reminders was drawn up to produce the maximum effect on the flow of revenue consistent with the economic use of staff. The general issue of reminders before the due date would be expensive in staff time and unlikely to lead to a commensurate acceleration of payments. In the long term, the introduction of mechanized accounting would make it possible, at small extra cost, to issue monthly pay slips automatically in advance of the due date of payment. This might stimulate early payment and cut down arrears. The mechanized system would also facilitate a more complete and regular programme of reminders.

The Inland Revenue also said that the experimental use of the new 1962 procedure for inspecting employers' records in order to quantify and certify liability and take recovery action, had provided collectors with a speedier and more effective process of recovery. The mere warning that the procedure would be applied often produced payments. A substantial increase in the number of deputed collectors had been authorized to enable further pressure to be made on slow payers. The Inland Revenue seem to pin great faith in these.

The COMPTROLLER's report includes the usual figures about fraud and evasion. The new statistics show the results of the investigations completed in the year to March 31st, 1964, compared with the figures for the five preceding years. They are as follows:

Year ended March 31st	Number of cases	Total charges raised	Penalties and interest included
1964	12,216	£15,563,617	£4,655,467
1963	10,944	14,020,699	4,289,258
1962	11,868	18,770,906	5,200,427
1961	9,752	12,905,544	5,549,820
1960	13,734	19,642,073	8,491,884
1959	10,757	18,013,864	6,792,470

These figures do not include minor settlements effected by local inspectors relating to untaxed interest, allowances, etc. These amounted to £1,153,607 in the year. It seems fairly safe to assume from the increased number of cases settled in the last year that the amending legislation of 1960 and 1962 is still making itself felt.

A remarkable amount of tax has to be written off each year. In the 1963 accounting period, 106,114 items of tax were remitted or abandoned to a total of £4,233,288, made up as follows:

Income tax	£2,919,259
Surtax	529,194
Excess profits tax	450,064
Profits tax	170,445
Death duties	142,915
Other duties	21,411

Penalties and Deceased Persons

LAST week we discussed the effect of various time limits in relation to the making of assessments on the executors of a deceased person, in order to obtain the tax which he should have paid during his lifetime. What of the time limits in relation to proceedings for penalties?

The Finance Act, 1923, extended the then three-year time limit for penalty proceedings to the period of six years following the date on which the penalty was incurred. The amending section made no mention of deceased persons. At that time there still held sway the ancient maxim actio personalis moritur cum persona into which no inroads had been made in relation to penalties. Six years is a long time. If there had been any question of suing personal representatives for penalties incurred by the deceased, it is almost certain that they would have been given the benefit of a shorter period so that process of administration would not be unduly held up.

Later in the twenties there was agitation for a dropping of the old maxim. This had its genesis largely in motor accidents where a negligent driver might inflict enormous damage, but the sufferers would be unable to recover from his estate because he had died, often in the same accident. Hence the passing of the Law Reform (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act, 1934, which provided (inter alia) quite broadly that causes of action against a person would survive his death. It was not realized at the time that this would automatically extend to income tax penalty proceedings. Although time limits of six months were imposed in the case of torts, they did not apply to penalty proceedings. The Act applied only to England, not to Scotland or Northern Ireland. After a few years the Revenue tumbled to the fact that they could sue executors within the general six-year time limit but only in England.

In 1942, the six-year time limit was extended for the purpose of suing for penalties where fraud or wilful default had been committed by or on behalf of the person incurring the penalty. Proceedings could now be commenced at any time before the expiry of three years from the final determination of the assessment. However, this was not to extend the time within which proceedings could be brought against the defaulting person's executors; this was still six years from the time the penalty was incurred. These provisions are now contained in section 501 of the Income Tax Act, 1952.

The six-year time limit in section 501 (1) is extended by section 54 of the Finance Act, 1960. It provides that where the amount of a penalty to which a person is liable is determined by reference to the tax charged in an assessment which was made not later than six years after the year to which the assessment relates, penalty proceedings can be commenced, despite section 501 (1) within three years after the final determination of that assessment. Nothing is said here about personal representatives. However, the somewhat enigmatic section 56 (5) provides as follows:

> 'Where the person who has incurred any fine or penalty has died, any proceedings under this section which have been or could have been commenced against him may be continued or commenced against his personal representatives . . . but nothing in this subsection shall extend the time for commencing proceedings against personal representatives.' (our italics.)

Section 56 (5) thus extends to Scotland and Northern Ireland the vulnerability of executors to proceedings for penalties incurred by the deceased. One would have expected that the position would be further tidied up by a provision that no proceedings for penalties were to be brought more than three years after the death. This would bring the position into line with that dealing with assessments, and would assist in the expeditious winding up of estates. However, this step was not taken. Proceedings can still be brought against executors provided they are brought within six years after the penalty was incurred. If it was incurred just before the death, then the estate cannot be safely wound up until six years have elapsed.

Where a penalty is imposed on executors for the misdeeds of the deceased, the beneficiaries are the real sufferers. The Commissioners' powers of mitigation in such circumstances present nice problems, particularly where, as is usual, the beneficiaries are not in any way implicated in the penalties. A recent case indicates that the High Court will not readily interfere.[1]

Profitable Farming

FARMING remains in the forefront of Britain's industries and is still one of the largest employers of labour in the country; but from the critical viewpoint of the accountant who measures results by profitability in relation to capital employed, it is one of the most inefficient. This, despite the fact that production continues to increase while the acreage of land given over to agriculture is decreasing at an alarming rate.

This is not for the lack of literature directed to the improvement of farming methods. Indeed, from the number of such publications which continue to be produced, we are bound to conclude that the farmer – small or large – should be so well provided with instruction and so well informed that if he can absorb and apply the advice which he is given there should be no excuse for failure to conduct an efficient and profitable business.

One of the latest and most comprehensive works which we have received is Records for Profitable Farming[1] by G. H. CAMAMILE, M.A., F.C.A., and T. W. D. THEOPHILUS – a combination of chartered accountant and regional farm management advisor whose joint practical experience should bear the stamp of authority. But despite the authors' claim that the book meets the need for new ideas on farm accounting and records, there is very little which has not already been expounded.

It is our experience that in the agricultural industry there are far too many working proprietors engaged in enterprises which can never hope to operate at a satisfactory margin of profit. The basic reasons are twofold: either the farmer himself is without the qualities which make a successful business man; or the holding which he farms is not of the right size and pattern to form an economic unit.

Records for Profitable Farming provides the reader with a most comprehensive set of examples, covering many aspects of the paperwork necessary for a successful enterprise and goes into the greatest detail of costings, budgetary control, financial records and physical records for individual enterprises. Rightly the authors comment that: 'The paperwork will not make him a good farmer if he lacks the necessary basic skills, but at least he should find out his deficiencies in time to stop with a whole skin and some of his money.'

This, in our view, is a vital pronouncement and one which should be given the utmost prominence; but unfortunately there is all too often a stubborn refusal to face the facts due to the expectation that somehow or other next year will produce a turn for the better.

The basic needs for successful farming, as in most other industries, are not only technical competence but a capacity for obtaining the best results from available labour and marketing ability. Without all three there can only at best be a mediocre performance, and often complete failure. Although detailed records and costings will reveal where weaknesses lie, they will not – as the above quotation indicates – create competence where it does not exist.

If we may be permitted one detailed criticism it is of the 'Trading account' for a specimen 325-acre farm which is used to illustrate the authors' methods. The layout of this account is not what we should expect, as there is no logical sequence or grouping in the headings of expenditure, and some of them are quite uninformative. Possibly this feature is deliberately exaggerated in order to demonstrate how the accounts are to be subsequently modified; but we should have thought that the financial accounts themselves should be designed in the first place to give as much information as possible.

Perhaps it is significant that the charge for accountancy is rated at only £30 out of a total revenue expenditure of £12,470! We can only suggest that such an example does a disservice to the accountancy profession.

Our final observation is on the subject of subsidies and grants. Most of the basic enterprises in British farming are supported in one way or another – and there are grants to be obtained for certain types of buildings and machinery. Has it ever occurred to those who write on farm accounts and costings to produce a profit and loss account showing as separate items of income those elements which are received from the taxpayer? The result would be very illuminating indeed, and we have more than a suspicion that in many cases this type of income will exceed the amount of the net profit.

A Man of Many Parts

NO man in our time has deserved more richly the tributes paid him both during a remarkable career or upon his death than SIR WINSTON CHURCHILL. The entire nation is for ever in his debt for his leadership in its darkest hour. For that reason alone The Accountant would mark the occasion of his passing.

Two aspects, however, of Sir WINSTON's long life have touched the interests of this journal. First, it, too, has just completed its ninetieth year, for the first issue saw the light of day exactly two calendar months before the infant CHURCHILL was born. The second aspect which at the time concerned the readers of this journal was his tenure of office as Chancellor of the Exchequer. Mr CHURCHILL, as he then was, presented five consecutive Budgets in the years 1925 to 1929.

His appointment as Chancellor in Mr STANLEY BALDWIN's cabinet after the sensational electoral victory in 1924 came as a surprise. Nevertheless, his distinguished career prior to that date encouraged even some of the critics to expect him to justify the appointment. And, following his maiden Budget address on April 28th, 1925, Sir ROBERT HORNE expressed the view that Mr CHURCHILL had 'risen to the heights we all anticipated'. The feature of that Budget address was not so much the total tax revenue of £711 million or the reduction of 6*d* in the standard rate to 4*s*; nor even his scheme for widows' and old-age pensions, but the decision to return to the gold standard.

His Budget address in 1926 evoked the tributes of 'conspicuous clarity' and 'fascinating rhetoric', but its contents were dominated by the imperative need for economy in every sphere if, as was then believed, 'the country was to regain its industrial and commercial supremacy'. He abolished the three years' averaging basis for income tax and announced an arrangement between Britain and the Irish Free State to eliminate double taxation. The most controversial item was his betting duty – condemned by speakers in his Party on moral grounds and by others as unworkable. His third Budget of 1927 reflected the economic consequences of the General Strike. Revenue was down and expenditure was up. Mr CHURCHILL sought to close the deficit by overhauling the basis of the Schedule E assessment and the supertax; he promised codification of the income tax law and a strengthening of the laws against avoidance.

The 1928 Budget was of minor interest tax-wise. Its main feature was a review of proposals for the de-rating of industry and agriculture. It was clear that the betting duty was a fiasco and he promised its overhaul in the next Budget. His address when presenting that – his fifth and last – on April 15th, 1929, was praised as the greatest and was marked by 'scintillating rhetoric'.

His speeches apart, Mr CHURCHILL was not the greatest Chancellor of our times. His critics attacked his dealings with the National Debt and his decision to return to the gold standard. He was, however, signally unfortunate in holding office in a period of severe economic recession; the absence of industrial revival hampered his revenue-raising activities. But, in all he did, both then and since, this remarkable man's abilities were evident to friend and opponent alike.

Chancellor of the Exchequer, 1924–29

by R. ROBERT, A.C.I.S.

THE virtues inherent in ordinary shares have been known to men with money to invest ever since joint-stock companies have existed. As evidence of this we may quote the case of John Evelyn, the famous diarist, who, shortly after Oliver Cromwell had renewed the charter of the East India Company, became interested in its shares. The Company's capital was then £739,782 divided into £500 shares – half of which was paid up. Evelyn had every reason to be satisfied with his purchase for he received a dividend of 20 per cent and eventually sold the share for £750, or three times the amount he had paid for it! Such a dividend and such a massive appreciation were, perhaps, exceptional – even in those halcyon days.

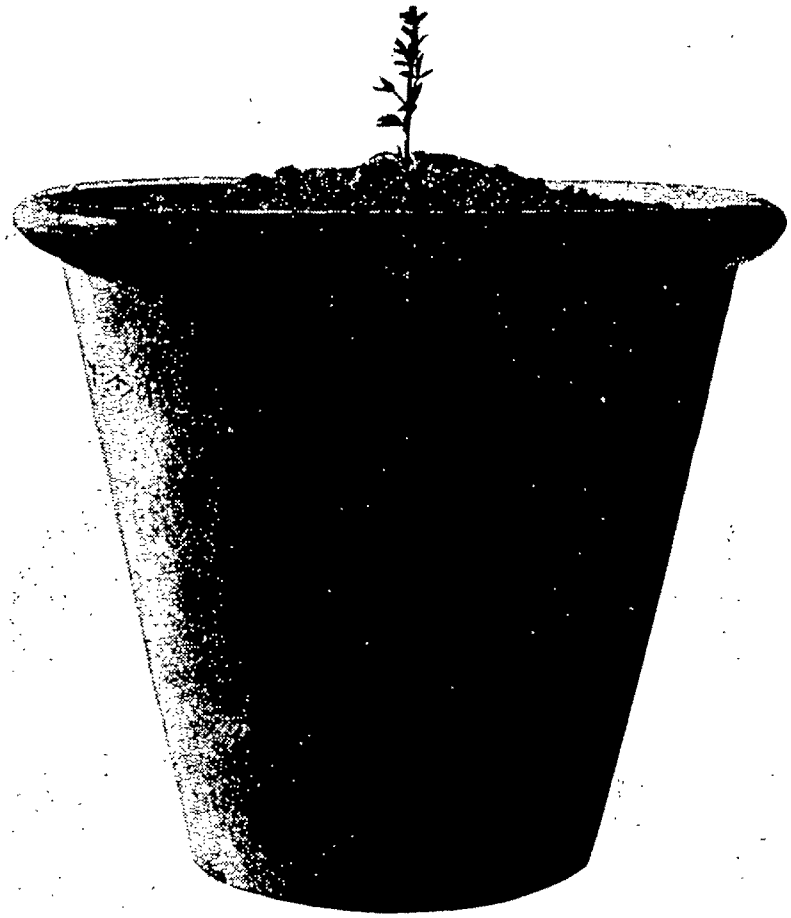
Of the subsequent gambling fever which culminated in the 'Bubble' crash of 1720 – the first and biggest financial disaster the City has ever known – it need only be said that the legal restrictions afterwards imposed on the formation of joint-stock companies put a taboo on equities that was to last for over a hundred years.

Pre-war Record

Between the two world wars, dealing in stocks and shares was confined to a small section of the community, for an air of mystery shrouded stock exchange transactions. It was, on the whole, a deflationary period. Money was tight, and the ordinary man had little surplus to be applied to either investment or speculation. The well-off, though not averse to holding sound equities, tempered enthusiasm with discretion, and the dominant cult in the 1920s and 1930s was that of the gilt-edged security.

There were, of course, short-lived boom periods during which many kinds of ordinary shares looked attractive to investors. Immediately after the close of the First World War, for example, when a spirit of optimism was abroad and an enormous, pent-up demand for consumer goods existed, industrial productivity soared to a high level. This, in turn, resulted in heavy speculative dealings in shares and, because of rising prices and rising wages, in an inflatory spiral. Quite a few companies paid out fabulous dividends – but the boom suddenly collapsed, a depression followed and equities lost their sparkle.

Again, in 1928, certain of the newer British industries enjoyed great prosperity. New York, in that year, had a fantastic stock exchange boom during which share prices rose to unprecedented heights. Then, because the underlying economic situation had been misjudged, the depths were plumbed. A major slump on the London Stock Exchange in 1930 was followed by a stupendous crash on Wall Street three years later. Investors on both sides of the Atlantic rushed to sell their shares for whatever they might fetch.



Government stocks, by comparison dull and unexciting, were at least safe. The preference of trustees, brokers and investors for 'gilt-edged' at that time is therefore easily understood.

A Hedge against Inflation

However, out of the experiences of the inter-war years there had emerged one incontrovertible fact: that in times of inflation, when money – the alleged 'store of value' – was depreciating, ordinary shares did provide a measure of protection. The classic example, of course, was given in 1923 by the Germans who, soon after their defeat, experienced the disaster of a total 'runaway' inflation. At the peak, in November 1923, 4,200 milliards of paper marks could be purchased for one American dollar! But the losses of equity-holders were comparatively light.

One of the lessons driven home by that momentous occurrence, which had repercussions all over the world, was that all the middle sections of society, living on fixed incomes – the rentiers, those with fixed-interest-bearing securities, and pensioners – were financially liquidated. In conditions of uncontrolled inflation, the wage and salary earners are able to safeguard their position to a limited extent, for earned incomes rise roughly in proportion to the price level. Those who convert their money into land, property, or goods are also able to survive the ordeal virtually unscathed. The holder of industrial equities – which yield higher dividends and rise in value as the inflation goes on – are also in a favourable position. A share certificate – like the bank or treasury note – is only a scrap of paper, but it represents a stake in a going concern; it is a claim on tangible assets such as land, buildings, plant, machinery, raw materials, work-in-progress, and finished goods.

How we put paid to our growing pains before they'd even started

As the most progressive of the larger building societies, we're proud of our growth graph. In ten years our assets have more than trebled and the number of our accounts nearly doubled. But you can only grow so far at this pace before you start feeling the effects. Book-keepers become book-bound, typists become type-cast.

So we took a revolutionary step for a building society. We bought ourselves a computer. The fastest and most efficient in the country. It's left us with a whole new expanse of growing space. Just goes to show how progressive we are. Why trust your investment with anyone less? It deserves progressive thinking behind it.

Demand for Blue Chips

The exact point at which it came into its own, by claiming the adherence not only of the financial cognoscenti but of the broad mass of savers, is a debatable point. But in retrospect it is clear that 1950, when the Korean War broke out, was a crucial year. Prior to June in that year there had been symptoms of a trade recession and it almost looked as if the creeping inflation had been checked. The war, accompanied as it was by stockpiling of materials in America, soon reversed that trend. Industries revived and prices on the stock exchange moved up on a broad front. The inflation was resumed and has continued ever since.

As the 1950s progressed, so it became obvious that every prudent investor wishing to safeguard his capital would have to buy equities. Throughout the decade, despite minor slumps and Government 'stop-go' policies, most industries were fully extended and, because of a new scientific revolution, they promised excellent growth prospects. These were facts that further reinforced the arguments in favour of ordinary shares, especially those of the favourites – the 'blue chips'.

By the time the sixties dawned, the once esoteric cult had made deep penetrations into the general consciousness. An insatiable demand for equities had developed and continued to develop for several years. Insurance companies and trade unions, pension funds and other institutional buyers, investment trusts and unit trusts, as well as vast numbers of private investors joined the mad scramble for shares. Whole schools of investment experts, of advisers, analysts, and financial journalists – high priests of the cult – came into being and poured out their libations of advice for the public benefit.

Then, in October 1964, the General Election took place and with the return of a new Government the climate of opinion changed. Within a month of the new Premier assuming office, the newspapers were reporting 'equities on the way down' – 'persistent selling', and 'further falls expected'. Confidence in the equity market was obviously shaken. The pundits were, at least temporarily, confused and the soothsayers reduced to silence. Left to gaze at abandoned altars, doubts began to assail the minds of the neophytes.

'A full-blooded capital gains tax and a fully-fledged corporation tax,' warned the economic prophet of The Observer, 'mean that in Throgmorton Street things will never be the same again.'

Divining the Future

Undoubtedly a mood of pessimism swept the City, as if something terrible and totally unforeseen had happened. There was a new Government a severe balance of payments crisis; the possibility that the economy might stagnate, rather than advance, in 1965; an unwelcome import duty; a penal Bank rate; and rumours of devaluation. There were inspired rumours that restrictions in Government expenditure – stopping the 'Concord' and other 'prestige' projects, reducing the armaments burden, and scaling down overseas commitments – might be the prelude to deflation. What then was to become of the cult?

The hard core of devotees were, of course, unshaken in their beliefs. Things, they declared, were not as bad as they looked – and despite the proposed tax reforms, the political hazards of further State intervention, dividend limitation, nationalization, and the uncertain trade prospects, there remained in the City and elsewhere, undaunted faith in the rightness of equities. Brokers in confidential asides expressed their conviction that it would still be profitable to buy, to hang on, to 'average', to seek out bargains while the going was good. Inflation, they predicted, was likely to be quite enormous in the next few years, and the motto should continue to be 'shares are best'.

They may well prove to be right. Quite conceivably the financial pattern of the past twenty years will go on repeating itself until the end of the century. On the other hand, some new pattern may emerge: there could be revolutionary changes in company law; the boom and the inflation might come to an abrupt standstill. No one – apart from Old Moore, and his guess is probably as good as that of the economists and politicians – can foretell the future. All that can be said with certainty is that the outlook is far from reassuring and unlikely to improve just yet.

Maybe the time has come for the omens to be re-read? Some bold spirit should, perhaps, arise to strike the cautionary note? A real heretic, prepared to burn at the stake, might even suggest that this widespread cult of the equity is not without its dangers, that it has been a little overdone and that it certainly will not last for ever.

The Capital Gains Tax — IV

CONTRIBUTED

IT is understood that the sale of the taxpayer's only or principal residence is placed outside the scope of the capital gains tax for the reason that the taxpayer will probably have to buy another residence (which will also have appreciated in value) with the proceeds.

That this situation is not peculiar to residences finds expression in the tax laws of other countries. In Belgium, for example, while capital gains are subject to corporate income tax, there are substantial concessions where the gains relate to assets which have been owned for more than five years, or are reinvested in fixed assets for the purpose of establishing a new company or for increasing capital. In France, too, capital gains by companies are subject to corporate income tax, but the tax is reduced to 10 per cent when the company has been in existence for more than five years and may also be deferred, in certain circumstances, for an indefinite period, if the proceeds of sale are reinvested within a period of three years from the date of sale.

If the Chancellor now proposes to place British companies in a less advantageous position, the competitiveness of certain continental countries which are trying hard to attract new industries will be given a timely boost at no cost to themselves.

Exchanges

Exchanges of property are within the Chancellor's definition of 'realization', but the statement of December 8th last, says that where stocks, shares or securities are treated as realized involuntarily, in such circumstances that new stocks etc. are received in place of those formerly held, as a result of a conversion operation or a scheme of company reorganization, no tax will immediately be chargeable, and cases of this kind will be dealt with broadly in accordance with paragraphs 10–14 of Schedule 9 to the Finance Act, 1962.

In this statement the words 'treated as realized involuntarily' could be quite material. Under the existing law, where one company acquires control of another company by exchanging shares or other securities in its own capital for the other company's shares, the securities in the company acquired are not treated as being disposed of by their former owner, but he is regarded as having obtained the securities in the acquiring company at the same time and for the same consideration as his original holding. The same position obtains where a bid for control is made but the offer is made unconditional without control having been obtained. But if securities in the acquiring company are not the only consideration for the shares in the company that is being acquired (for example, if there is a cash consideration), the appropriate proportion of the latter company's shares is treated as having been disposed of for the additional consideration.

One naturally wonders whether, under the new law, a shareholder who parts with his shares voluntarily as a result of a take-over bid will be prejudiced as compared with a holder whose shares are transferred compulsorily under the provisions of section 209 of the Companies Act, 1948. If concessions are made to companies which re-invest capital gains, it would seem that similar concessions should be available to individuals who switch stocks and shares. No one will incur the expense of switching unless he thinks or is advised that the stock he buys is better than the one he sells. Now that the Revenue is to be a partner in the investor's capital gains, whenever realized, it will be bad business as well as bad sense to tax switches where both sales and purchases take place within a limited period of each other.

Estate Duty

The present structure of estate duty is sadly in need of reform, and the rates of duty badly in need of revision downwards, particularly at the higher levels. The 70, 75 and 80 per cent rates are both punitive and uneconomic and in 1958–59 yielded only £1·16 million. This subject was referred to in The Accountant for March 14th, 1959 (page 295), March 21st (page 337) and January 16th, 1965 (page 57). Nevertheless, the Chancellor proposes, in effect, to increase the rates of estate duty wherever there has been a capital gain on death and, as will be seen later, these increases can be quite substantial.

In the case of personal property (including leaseholds), as opposed to realty, estate duty is payable on the delivery of the Inland Revenue affidavit or account, or on the expiration of six months from the death, whichever first happens. The duty thus becomes payable before the grant of probate or letters of administration and, in addition, interest is chargeable from the date of death. The distinction as to the time of payment of estate duty, between personalty and realty, was created when the maximum rate of duty was 8 per cent, against 80 per cent today, and when few deceased estates which attracted duty at the highest rate did not comprise a high proportion of realty. Now, most large estates comprise a high proportion of stocks and shares which can suffer sudden and heavy falls in times of crisis, so that it is possible for a millionaire to leave his widow and family penniless. Between July 6th, 1957, and February 25th, 1958, for example, The Financial Times ordinary index fell from 207·6 to 154·4 – a drop of more than 25 per cent, and 5 per cent more than the retained portion of deceased estates attracting duty at the 80 per cent rate.

Apparently Mr Callaghan has overlooked the already sufficiently great difficulties of executors and administrators of large estates. Executors have power to pledge specific assets of the deceased before probate is obtained and the act will be valid if probate is granted to them, but if declined difficulty may arise. Administrators, on the other hand, cannot give such a charge before obtaining grant of administration. Accordingly, the practice of bankers is to make advances to executors and administrators on their personal responsibility covered by an undertaking to apply the sum advanced for payment of estate duty and expenses. As part of the undertaking the personal representatives agree to repay the advance out of the first moneys received on account of the estate of the deceased and that, in default of repayment within a reasonable time, the advance shall be treated as a demand loan for which they are jointly and severally responsible. In a case in 1871, Mellish, L.J., said:

> 'It appears to me to be settled law that, under a contract of borrowing made by an executor after the death of the testator, the executor is only liable personally and cannot be sued as executor so as to get execution against the assets of the testator.'

Thus, a severe decline between the date of death and the date of sale in the deceased's securities can endanger not only the solvency of the estate but also involve the personal representatives in personal liability to the bank. Small wonder that it is becoming increasingly difficult to induce relatives or friends to act as executors in the case of large estates. Now Mr Callaghan's proposals will aggravate this difficulty.

Examples of the Tax

If a deceased person leaves an estate valued at £999,000, none of which is chargeable to capital gains tax, the rate of estate duty will be 75 per cent and the amount of duty approximately £750,000. If, however, £805,000 is chargeable to the gains tax, the first £5,000 will be exempt, and the remaining £800,000 (assuming that the tax is charged at the standard rate of income tax, as was apparently the intention of the minority of the Royal Commission) will cost £330,000. Deducting this sum from £999,000 leaves £669,000 which attracts estate duty at 70 per cent and costs £468,300. Estate duty and gains tax added together total £798,300 and exceed the present cost of estate duty alone by £48,300 and add approximately 4·8 per cent to the rate of duty.

If the deceased's estate is valued at £1,251,000 (so as to exceed the value at which section 13 (1) of the Finance Act, 1914, operates (see Green's Death Duties, fifth edition, page 374)), estate duty at 80 per cent will amount to approximately £1 million. If £305,000 is chargeable to the gains tax, also at standard rate income tax, the cost (allowing for the exemption of the first £5,000) will be £123,750, and the net estate chargeable to estate duty after deduction of the gains tax will be £1,127,250. In the case of estates over £1 million, the value below which section 31 (1) operates is £1,250,000, so that the £1,127,250 will attract estate duty at 75 per cent, not 80 per cent, and will cost £847,437. But to this sum will have to be added the difference between £1 million and £1,127,250, namely £127,250, making a total charge to estate duty of £972,687. Estate duty and capital gains tax added together give £972,687+£123,750=£1,096,437, and add about 8 per cent to the present rate of estate duty.

Small Estates

On an estate of £10,000 the present rate of estate duty is 4 per cent and the duty payable £400. If £8,000 of the estate were chargeable to the gains tax, the first £5,000 would be exempt and the remaining £3,000, on the same basis as before, would pay tax of £1,237. Deducting this sum from £10,000 leaves £8,763 which, at 4 per cent, would cost £350 in estate duty. Estate duty and gains tax combined would therefore cost £1,237+£350 =£1,587 and would add 11·8 per cent to the present rate of estate duty.

Taking a rather larger estate with a net value of £25,150, duty at 18 per cent on an estate between £25,000 and £30,000 would cost £4,527. But the value below which section 13 (1) operates in that case is £25,333, so that the operative rate is the next lower rate, namely, 15 per cent, which, together with the excess of £150 over the £25,000, makes a total duty payable of £3,900. Assuming that 30 per cent of the £25,150, amounting to £7,545, represented a capital gain, the first £5,000 would be exempt from tax, and the tax on the remaining £2,545 would amount to £1,050. Deducting this sum from £25,150 leaves £24,100 which, at 15 per cent, would cost £3,615 in estate duty. Estate duty and capital gains tax combined would therefore cost £3,615+£1,050= £4,665 and would add about 3 per cent to the present rate of estate duty, making it rather more than 18 per cent.

It is clear, therefore, that unless the capital gains tax, so far as it operates on death, is graduated in some way so as to favour small and medium-sized estates, it will fall more heavily, relatively, on such estates than on large estates, assuming always that the same proportion of the total estate is subject to the gains tax. In any event, it has been well said that death duties 'seem only to make the rich poorer without helping to make the poor richer' and that unlike taxes on income or expenditure they serve mainly to reduce saving and not spending. This applies mutatis mutandis to a capital gains tax chargeable on death.

Wills

Personal representatives of deceased persons will, of course, be concerned not only with assets held by the deceased next Budget day, but also with any subsequently acquired assets which throw up a gain between the date of acquisition and date of death. They will also have other problems.

When estate duty has been paid by the accountable person, the question then arises how the burden of duty should be shared between the persons entitled under the deceased's will or intestacy. There are rules relating to the incidence of estate duty; for example, the duty on free personalty is a testamentary expense borne by the deceased's assets in the order laid down by the Administration of Estates Act, 1925, while the duty on realty is a charge on the realty which is borne by the devisees. But these rules may be varied by the testator.

In the case of wills made before November 12th, 1964 (the date of the first announcement of the new capital gains tax), testators will normally have taken estate duty into account in making their dispositions, but will clearly not have had the capital gains tax in mind. Consequently, the amount of the residuary estate may have to be increased to meet a possible charge to gains tax, so as to avoid the beneficiaries being called upon to forgo part of their testamentary gifts. This is something which will certainly have to be considered in future and which may necessitate the revision of a large number of wills already made.

Where property is settled by will the question arises as to whether the gains tax is to be borne by the tenant for life or the remaindermen. The basis rule is that where the capital of the trust property is in any way augmented, the augmentation accrues for the benefit of all the beneficiaries and is accordingly to be treated as capital and not as income. On this principle it seems that any gains tax referable to the settled part of the deceased's estate will have to come out of the trust capital, but as yet there has been no pronouncement on this point.

Settlements

If an estate owner divests himself of capital before next Budget day he will at least avoid liability to capital gains tax whether or not he survives the five-year period for estate duty purposes. If he has already decided upon the divestment he should, normally, hasten to carry it out before the operative date for the new tax; but if after that date he can still divest himself of assets which will not attract the gains tax, and he has a fair expectation of life, there is no point in hurrying. There are, however, two arguments against this course: (i) the assets in question may appreciate after Budget day, and (ii) the provisions of the new Finance Bill may go further than the bare outline plan suggests. If, on the other hand, the taxpayer has not yet decided upon a settlement of part of his estate, then personal circumstances as well as the operation of the gains tax will dictate his course, and he should probably decide nothing without expert advice. At the best of times settlements are a tricky business and these are not normal times.

Conclusion

It could be that there is something to be said for the corporation tax in principle, if it were relieved of the many unhappy features it contains. But the same cannot be said for the capital gains tax. It taxes gains which are illusory in so far as they stem from inflation and are imaginary in that they ignore unrealized losses. It will make a grievous addition to the burden of estate duty, encourage spending as opposed to saving, immobilize capital, and act as a disincentive to the 'hard work and great energy' on which the Chancellor relies. It is a bad tax and naïve indeed is the Chancellor's idea that it will remove anomalies and make for fairness all round. (Concluded.)

SOUTH AFRICA

Regulation of Shops and Offices

THE Shops and Offices Act, No. 75 of 1964, which was enacted during the 1964 session of Parliament, came into operation throughout South Africa on January 1st. Broadly speaking, the Act applies to all shops and offices which, up to the present, have not been subject to specific laws or wage determinations or like agreements, regulating working conditions for clerical employees. The Act is of importance to accountants because not only does it touch almost all clients in some way or another but it also affects practising accountants themselves in their dealings with their own staff, including articled clerks.

The Act applies to practising accountants, because they fall within the terms of the definition of an 'employer' conducting an 'office' and articled clerks, together with other types of assistants employed in accountants' offices are brought within the scope of the Act, unless they are employees whose regular rate of remuneration, excluding any subsistence and transport allowances is not less than R1,920 (£960) in the more important centres of the Republic; this latter limit being reduced to as low as R1,680 (£840) for other areas.

The Act regulates the maximum number of hours of ordinary time and overtime which employees may be required to work, as well as providing for the usual meal hour breaks and daily spreadover of time. The Act provides for the minimum hourly rates to be paid in respect of overtime worked and the conditions under which work can be required on a Sunday or public holiday are also prescribed. A minimum period for annual leave is decreed and the conditions under which annual or sick leave may be sought and must be granted are also laid down.

It also includes regulations controlling such matters as the ventilation and lighting of offices; the provision of various facilities for employees; conditions of work etc. While certain requirements of the Act had to be complied with as from January 1st, it will take some little time for all the benefits for clerical employees which the Act will bring to be appreciated.

Appreciation Course in Management Accounting

IN pursuance of its endeavours to keep the profession in touch with modern developments in all fields of interest to accountants, the Joint Council of the Societies of Chartered Accountants in South Africa has decided to organize nationally a series of courses which will give South African chartered accountants an appreciation of management accounting and which will deal with most of the controls available to management.

The courses are being designed to aid accountants who are in industry and commerce as well as those engaged in the profession in auditing and general practice. They will cover the basic essentials of business accounting and the role of the accountant in such fields as organization and management; standard costing and control applied to manufacturing concerns and other types of business; sales planning and control; cash forecasting; electronic data processing; bonus incentive schemes for management; profitability studies and mathematical techniques.

In order to achieve the greatest benefit for all, it has been decided to limit enrolment for each course to a maximum of twenty members. Each course will extend over five consecutive morning sessions. The first one is to be held in Johannesburg in the second week of February; thereafter similar courses will take place in Pretoria and elsewhere in the Transvaal according to demand. Later on it is hoped to arrange courses in the Cape, Natal and the Free State. Enrolment for the first course is now proceeding.

Valuations for Mergers

EARNING capacity, with the application of a multiplier to the projected level of earnings, should be the basis for valuation in mergers, said Mr G. Kenneth Carr, F.C.A., in The Canadian Chartered Accountant for October. The multiplier should be determined by consideration of price-earnings ratios of companies in the same industry, with shares publicly traded. Factors such as dividend policy should also be taken into account. Thus, if the market value of the shares of the company to be acquired has been unduly depressed by current or past dividends, he would adjust for this, since acquisition of the company will carry with it the power to control dividend policy. Other factors are a downward adjustment of the price-earnings ratio for privately-owned businesses, through lack of marketability, and a preference for broadly-based earnings and a growth potential.

The element of control acquisition had its effect on the purchase of the shares of Page-Hersey Tubes Ltd by The Steel Co of Canada Ltd, nine and a quarter Stelco shares with a market price of $24 being issued for eight of Page-Hersey, which were only $22. This indicates a premium of about 26 per cent, which Mr Carr considers about normal. It contrasts with the 'take-over bid' of all the shares of Canadian Oil Cos Ltd, by Shell Investments Ltd, in 1962, in which the normal 20 per cent premium of the initial offer had to be raised to a 50 per cent premium for acceptance.

Mr Carr rightly concluded by stressing the essential factor in any scheme, that the distribution of common shares of the amalgamated company should be apportioned on the basis of the relative contribution by each company to the earnings potential of the new enterprise.

UNITED STATES

Access of Tax Authorities to C.P.A.'s Work Papers

THE U.S. Inland Revenue Service has agreed that examining officers shall not request access to accountants' work papers as standard examining procedure, but it has reiterated the right of its officers to such examination. In any case, only the relevant portion of work papers is to be requested, and they will be regarded only as a collateral source of information.

The American Institute of Certified Public Accountants raised this matter with the Inland Revenue Service because there seemed to be an increasing tendency for tax officials to ask for complete sets of work papers.

Accounting and Price Level Change

COMMENTING on the publication of the American Institute's Accounting Research Study No. 6 on 'Reporting the Financial Effects of Price Level Changes', Mr Raymond C. Lauver, C.P.A., points out in the New York Certified Public Accountant recently that this announcement results from instructions to the Director of Accounting Research by an Accounting Principles Board which had already accepted the fact that accounting could no longer ignore the effect of dollar fluctuations. It is only a question of how accounting is to be altered. It is also significant that price level adjustment is taken as referring to conversion of all items to dollars of the same general purchasing power, thus retaining the historical cost basis and ignoring price changes resulting from supply and demand factors.

The study concludes in favour of reflecting price level changes in supplemental statements. As a minimum it is suggested that comparisons for a period of years should be facilitated by conversion of sales, net income, common stock equity, and gains and losses on monetary items, all to a common basis. The index considered most suitable is the gross national product implicit price deflator, based on all goods and services exchanged in all segments of the economy. It is recommended that a recognized economic organization should be commissioned to study the matter, after which the American Institute should urge the business community to adopt the recommendations. Conversion should not go back before 1945.

IRISH REPUBLIC

Advisory Service to Irish Industry

DETAILS have recently been released of a new advisory service with a marked accountancy angle to be provided by the Irish National Productivity Committee. This body was established in 1959 with the support of the Department of Industry and Commerce as a co-ordinating organization to enhance productivity measures on a national basis, and is comprised primarily of representatives of employers, trade unions and the universities. After concentrating in the initial stages on management/labour relations, the I.N.P.C. now plans an advisory service for small and medium-sized industries.

An adviser will be assigned to investigate the business and report on all aspects of operations, including its accounting work, together with a financial analysis spread over a number of years. Follow-up visits will be arranged, with a view to establishing more permanent relationships between the client and the service, which will be available for consultation when required.

The point of interest to Irish accountants is that the I.N.P.C. brochure specifies cost accounting, financial analysis, management accounting, and office methods and procedures, as defined areas to be investigated. No reference is made to the company's auditors, who may well be interested in considering how this new service may overlap their sphere of activity, or whether it highlights the need for them to provide this type of expertise of their own accord.

INLAND REVENUE STATEMENT

Estate Duty

Limited Clearances under section 46, Finance Act, 1940

The following statement relating to clearances from liability to estate duty under section 46, Finance Act, 1940, was issued by the Board of Inland Revenue on Thursday of last week

THE Board of Inland Revenue are prepared in certain cases to consider requests for limited clearances from estate duty under section 46 of the Finance Act, 1940, in advance of a death.

The cases are those where a company to which the section applies is concerned in a transaction which, by custom, requires the giving by a person of an indemnity against any liability for estate duty under the section and is either:

(a) a sale of its shares by prospectus, offer for sale or placing, in conjunction with a request to a recognized stock exchange in the United Kingdom for permission to deal in, and a quotation for, the whole of that class of shares, or provided that in cases (b) and (c) no person substantially interested directly or indirectly as purchaser or lender is a relative of the person who is required to give the indemnity; 'relative' means husband, wife, ancestor, lineal descendant, brother or sister.

(b) a sale at arm's length of shares which carry voting control of the company, or

(c) a borrowing by the company of £100,000 or more for a term of five years or more.

The clearance, where given, will be limited by the fact that it will give protection only from duty payable in connection with the death of the person required to give the indemnity, on the assumption that his death takes place at any time up to a date immediately after the early completion of the transaction in hand. It will not give protection if his death occurs later, or from duty payable in connection with the death of any other person.

A request for a clearance should be addressed to the Controller, Estate Duty Office, Minford House, Rockley Road, London W14, or to the Registrar of Death Duties, P.O. Box No. 94, 6 Waterloo Place, Edinburgh 1, and brief details of the transaction in hand should be given to establish that it satisfies the conditions described above. It will be considered on the understanding that the company is one to which the section applies; i.e. that it is within the definition in section 58 (1), Finance Act, 1940, and that the person or persons concerned have transferred property to it.

It will not be possible to enter into any discussion or explanation if the request for a clearance has to be refused, either on the ground that a claim under section 46, Finance Act, 1940, may arise, or on the ground that the case does not come within the scope of these arrangements.

Letter of Inquiry

A copy of the letter of inquiry which will be addressed to applicants by the Assistant Controller, Estate Duty Office, is set out below in order that the nature and extent of the information required from them may be known in advance.

Dear ———

..... Co Ltd

I have your letter of the ..... in which you request a clearance from liability to estate duty under section 46, Finance Act, 1940.

On the understanding that this company is one to which section 58 (1), Finance Act, 1940, applies and to which the person at (2) below has made a transfer of property, the matter will receive further attention when the following information has been supplied.

(1) The Company

(a) The name and address of the company requiring the clearance.

(b) A copy of the original memorandum and articles of association of the company with all amendments to date.

(c) Balance sheets, trading and profit and loss accounts of the company for each of the last five years.

(d) The following details as at five years ago, with all subsequent changes:

(i) the company's issued capital;

(ii) the name of all shareholders, indicating how they are related and if any of them hold the shares as trustees;

(iii) the amount of their shareholdings;

(iv) the directors.

(2) The Person

(if more than one person is considered relevant in the application of section 46 to the above-named company, the details requested should be given for each of them.)

(a) Name and address of the person whose death is assumed for the purpose of this application.

(b) The salary, commission, fees, pension and any other remuneration received by him from the company during each of the last five years, with details of any office he held under the company and the services which he rendered in return for such remuneration.

(c) Full statements for the five-year period of his current and loan account, if any, with the company.

(d) All benefits in kind or assets of the company enjoyed by him during the five-year period.

(e) Any income or capital of the company paid to him or for his benefit or to which he was entitled during the last five years, e.g. dividends, arrears of dividends, interest, liquidation payments, repayments of debentures and other distributions of cash or assets in specie.

(f) Any other benefits to him in the last five years, not listed under paragraphs (b) to (e) above, arising directly or indirectly from his connection with the company, e.g. transfers of property, issues of shares on bonus terms and releases of debts or other obligations made by the company in favour of other companies in the shares of which he was beneficially interested.

(g) Brief details of transactions within the last five years which may have affected his title to receive or his power to obtain any benefits from the company, e.g. gifts, sales, exchanges or redemptions involving his shares, debentures or other interests in the company or its assets.

(h) Brief details of all agreements between him and the company and of all settlements by him of shares, debentures or other interests in the company or its assets.

Consideration can be given to this application only on the understanding that this office cannot enter into any discussion of its decision in the event of a refusal of a clearance.

Yours faithfully,

.....

Assistant Controller.

I WAS feeling rather annoyed last week. There was that momentary tension when the blood pounds at the temples, when the heart seems to miss a beat and the breath quickens, when the urge to tell your colleague what a so-and-so stupid ass he has become, seems almost irresistible.

It had all started with our computer. Of course, we haven't yet actually got a computer. Keen as we may be on the manifold benefits to be bestowed on us by our computer when we commence to operate it – still we haven't exactly ordered it. True, numerous glossy brochures headed with cryptic initials like E.D.P. litter our desks, but so far the homely importance of £ s d weighs heavier in the balance. Our auditor, that knowledgeable exponent of combining prudence with vaulting ambition o'erleaping itself, grins shrewdly and demurs. The chairman is emulous of our competitors, Jones & Co, who are rumoured to be about to install a highly expensive monster. 'Keeping up with', says our auditor sagely, may prove ruinous.

When we in 'accounts' refer to 'our' computer, I hasten to add, we mean just that. It will be ours. Ours to plan, install, supervise lovingly, and staff proudly; to interpret dynamically its output will be our mission in life.

There have been sundry band-wagon-climbers of the Johnny-come-lately breed who have attempted to invade our territory. The sales manager has claimed egotistically that his department should run the computer on the grounds that his sales are the most important figures it will analyse. Our electrical maintenance engineer, fussing excitedly with diagrams of drums and switches, has urged that as no section but his can carry out the necessary maintenance work, then his section alone should manage it. We finally routed these alien infiltrators by remarking nonchalantly at the board meeting that any department but ours would need to recruit a dozen or so extra employees to staff the new project. The managing director, to whom the manpower-reduction policy is as his ewe lamb, nearly had a seizure at the suggestion. That wrote off the opposition.

Picture my indignation, then, on picking up a fat American magazine of some prominence and finding in it an article on E.D.P. which pronounced authoritatively such rampant heresies as the following. It started fairly enough:

'Machine accountants were the first to become aware of computer potential . . . they thus became a ready-made repository for the A.D.P. function . . . conversion of existing punched-card installations seemed to be the natural avenue . . . the responsibility for A.D.P. was "logically" assigned to the assistant-controller in charge of machine accounting.'

But the acid soon started to drip:

'The move . . . has got many companies into trouble. His new A.D.P. role frequently places the assistant-controller in an unfamiliar position where he can do neither himself nor his organization much good. . . . They (the A/Cs) are buried too deep in one leg of the business. They lack status. They lack authority . . . they lack the entrepreneur's view of the enterprise as a whole.'

Having dismissed the profession's claims in this series of sweeping generalizations, the article went on to discuss pompously the need for none but top-management, in a newly-established department, to operate the computer. How dumb can you get? Clearly the controller in the lower-intelligence-bracket of United States literature has achieved an all-time low image . . . haven't we an accountant anywhere in the A.D.P. world with a success story to redress balance?

Finance and Commerce

Associated Engineering

IT is in the natural way of things that companies which, in their accounts, were already meeting most of the London Stock Exchange's requirements and suggestions on company reporting should be willing to go that much further in providing additional information. Associated Engineering Ltd, whose accounts form this week's reprint, is a case in point.

A year ago the report showed turnover, broken down to home and overseas, net capital employed, cash flow, capital expenditure and other items in a 'salient items' feature. There was also an informative ten-year record as well as full details of subsidiaries – names, addresses, boards – grouped by divisions.

New to the 1963–64 report are the source and use of funds, details of employees and stockholders (included in the reprint) and also four charts showing net capital employed, turnover, net profit before taxation and capital expenditure, tracing back each item over the past ten years – the combination of the four charts providing a useful 'view at a glance' of the relationship of these four factors.

For example, net profits for 1963–64 at £3·6 million were only £100,000 below the peak of 1959–60 but turnover then was £27 million whereas in the past year it was £43·5 million. But capital spending, which was only £1·7 million in 1959–60, rose to £3·9 million in the following year and to a peak of £6·4 million in 1962. In 1962–63, capital spending was under £3 million and in the past year under £1·5 million.

Take-over Treatment

From their 1959–60 peak of £3·7 million, profits fell back to £2·9 million in the following year and for the next two years were held at £2·1 million. Recovery to £3·6 million in the past year reflects the benefits stemming from the heavy capital spending of 1961 through 1963.

During the past year Associated Engineering took over The Glacier Metal Co – if 'took over' is the correct description of an offer made as the result of discussions between two groups whose relationships had been cordial for some years. It is typical of the Associated Engineering board's attitude towards account presentation – bearing our opening comments in mind – that the Glacier Metal addition to the group is treated as it is in this year's report.

A less enlightened company would have lumped seven months' Glacier profits with those of the rest of the group and would have been prepared to have left it at that. The Associated Engineering treatment of the position is shown clearly enough in the profit and loss account. The earnings performance of the Associated Engineering group can be commonly compared and the Glacier earnings taken separately into account.

Depreciation Policy

A shade belatedly it should be explained that Associated Engineering is a group of engine component manufacturing companies – principally piston rings, cylinder liners, tappets, valve seats, turbine blades and the like in one division and vehicle radiators, heat exchangers and presswork in another. The Glacier Metal Co adds a bearings division to the group, the Glacier company having, by concentration on technical developments, captured 45 per cent of the United Kingdom vehicle builders' market and established a predominant position as a supplier of bearings to industry in general.

The Glacier profits of £354,000 for the seven months are approximately at the same rate as for the year to February 1964 and are arrived at, as Mr H. R. Moore, chairman of Associated Engineering, explains, after charging £46,000 of additional depreciation 'which brings the company's rates more in line with those of the rest of the Group'.

On depreciation policy, Mr Moore says: 'It has always been our policy to provide realistically for depreciation. This has meant that the annual charge has tended to be substantial, but we feel that, with the development of automation, the rate of obsolescence of plant can only grow in the future, and that it is wise to err on the side of caution.'

Revaluation

The net goodwill of £1,063,000 arising on the Glacier acquisition has been written off partly against capital reserves and partly against revenue reserves. The £320,000 written off the cost of Associated Engineering's investment in SpA Pistone AE Borgo represents losses incurred in Italy for the two years to September 30th, 1964, about half of which were local financing charges.

The assets of Glacier were revalued for purposes of the acquisition and the directors of Associated Engineering are considering carrying out a revaluation of the land and buildings of all other United Kingdom companies in the group. The last valuation was in 1955 and, as Mr Moore says, 'an up-to-date valuation would provide shareholders with a clear picture of the present value of these assets.'

That is necessary since the Glacier deal entailed the issue of 750,000 6¾ per cent £1 preference shares and £1,875,000 of ordinary stock, increasing Associated Engineering's issued capital to £13,572,007. Meanwhile, capital expenditure, which in the past year was mainly confined to the final instalments of schemes initiated in previous years, is rising again. The present capital programme is in the region of £3 million but it is not expected that more than about £2 million will actually be spent this year.

CITY NOTES

STOCK-market business has been thrown into the political whirlpool again by the surprise result of the Leyton by-election. Immediately on the Leyton news the equity market indulged in a sharp rise measured in terms of a 9·2 points rise in The Financial Times industrial share index in one day.

But even before that the market was looking firmer, with returning confidence based on the narrower trade gap shown by the December trade figures and the second successive monthly rise in the industrial production index.

Evidence of returning institutional support in the equity market also helped sentiment. How long it will be before Budget doubts begin to prey on the market's mind is another matter but for the time being at least there is a more confident mood.

There has been significantly heavy oversubscription for new share offers. Admittedly the offers were attractively pitched but the extent of support was surprisingly heavy. A buoyant new issue market should help to prompt a generally more confident market atmosphere.

In the short term it seems probable that the equity markets will sustain their recent rise. The January trade figures will be an important factor in the short-term market trend. In some quarters there is still an inclination not to trust the present rise too far but that does not necessarily prevent the rise from going further.

THE Shipbuilding Conference reports that in the last quarter of 1964 British shipbuilders secured orders for fifty-nine merchant ships of 242,000 tons gross, making a total of 214 ships of 961,000 tons gross booked during the whole year. Ships for overseas registration accounted for 12½ per cent of the tonnage ordered. In 1963 builders booked orders for 253 ships of 1,523,000 tons gross.

At the end of 1964 the industry's total order book, excluding naval work, stood at 306 ships of 2,467,000 tons gross, with an estimated value of £316 million. The Conference comments that: 'There is little doubt that better credit facilities will have to be made available in this country if British owners are to be encouraged to aid the balance of payments position by placing their orders in home shipyards rather than in those countries abroad which can offer extremely attractive terms.'

THE arrangement under which the Coats, Patons & Baldwin group plans to acquire a controlling interest in Pasolds has been the subject of comment in the City. The effective bid price is 52*s* 6*d* and the Pasold family has underwritten the deal to the extent of undertaking to supply shares to provide Coats, Patons with a controlling stake should outside shareholders prefer not to accept the bid price. General opinion is that outside shareholders will not exactly fall over themselves to accept Coats, Patons' price, even though it puts the shares on a dividend yield of under 2 per cent.

THE Charrington United Breweries' bid for Offilers' Brewery, of Derby, provides further evidence of the still existing move towards regrouping in the brewery industry and also of the tighter terms on which this regrouping is being carried out. Experience in the trade is that benefits from mergers take considerably longer to develop than was originally anticipated. In the stock-market, share prices of the smaller groups already discount merger moves to a considerable degree and in some quarters of the trade there is talk of 'overvaluation', at least in terms of immediate merger worth.

Leasing and Accounting

SIR, – I was very interested to read Mr Gordon Wright's article on 'A new look at leasing' in your January 16th issue. The only criticism I could have would be that it stopped short by suggesting that leasing obligations should be disclosed only by way of a footnote. Footnotes can never be a substitute for proper accounting, where this is an alternative.

As accountants, we are concerned with the substance of a contract as opposed to the legal form it may take; in many cases leasing constitutes the acquisition of an asset and a corresponding liability. Profits also could be materially distorted where, as is often the case, the lease agreement provides for a relatively high annual payment in an initial period, with an option to renew on a nominal basis thereafter, as compared with the effect on net income of conventional depreciation applied to the original cost.

The American Institute of Certified Public Accountants first issued a bulletin on the subject in 1949. The latest A.I.C.P.A. opinion (September 1964) considers that the asset acquired and the related obligation should be included as an asset and liability in the balance sheet if the lease results in the creation of a 'material equity' in the asset. The two situations which would indicate that an equity has been established (in a non-cancellable lease) are defined as:

(1) where the initial term is materially less than the useful life of the asset and the lessee has the option to renew the lease for the remaining useful life of the asset at substantially less than the fair rental value; or

(2) the lessee has the right, during or at the expiration of the lease, to acquire the asset at a price which at the inception of the lease appears to be substantially less than the probable fair value of the asset at the time or times of permitted acquisition by the lessee.

In these situations the property and the obligation should be stated in the balance sheet at an appropriate discounted amount of future payments under the lease agreement.

Where it is not appropriate to record leases as assets and liabilities, the American Institute considers that financial statements should disclose sufficient information regarding material non-cancellable leases to enable the reader to assess the effect of the lease agreements upon the financial position and results of operations, both present and prospective, of the lessee. Disclosure should be made of the minimum annual rentals under such leases and the period over which the outlays will be made.

By a special bulletin of October 1964, the American Institute advises members that where clients adopt procedures having a materially different effect from those advised by the Institute (even when these other procedures have substantial authority to support them) members should disclose the fact either in a separate paragraph in the audit opinion or in a footnote to the accounts, indicating where practicable the effect of such departure on the financial statements.

I hope Mr Wright's article will provoke a similar serious recognition of the problem of accounting for leases in the U.K.

Yours faithfully,

London EC2. P. D. COOPER, F.C.A.

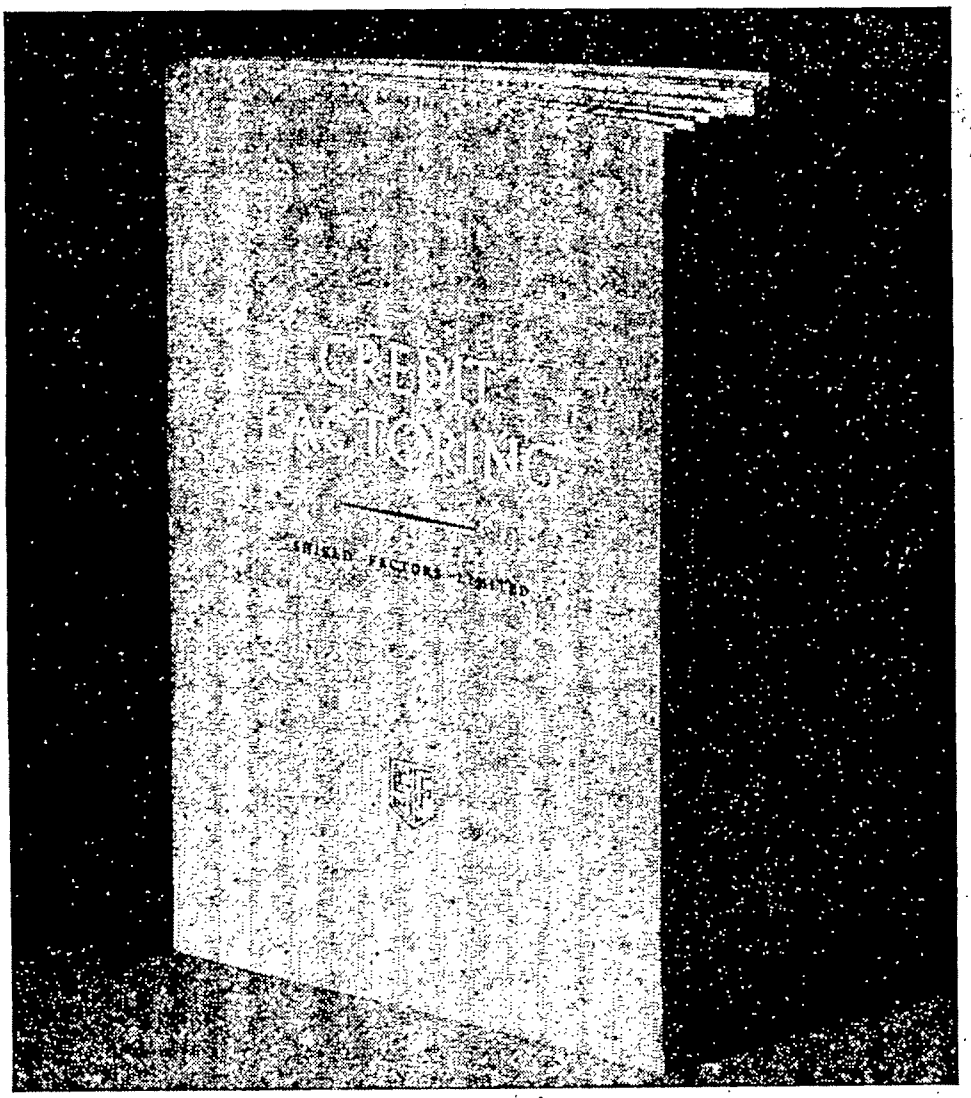
Tuition by Post

SIR, – I feel sure that many of your readers will, like myself, have been interested to read Mr Peterson's article reproduced in your issue of January 23rd, and also your leading article, and they may well agree that there is room for improvement in correspondence courses – particularly by combining short residential courses with them.

It is, however, refreshing to find the merits and potentialities of correspondence courses being recognized as well as their drawbacks. In the period since the war, it has become too fashionable to decry postal tuition, particularly for students of accountancy.

In one of his more critical passages, Mr Peterson writes:

> 'If, as seems not improbable, there is an occupational risk of developing a narrow, inflexible and arithmetical outlook in the profession of accountancy, it seems particularly unfortunate that this profession alone should rely so exclusively on what is, if left to itself, the least humanizing and broadening of techniques for its initial professional education.'



I would inquire whether this does not overlook the articled clerk's daily work with a variety of people in a variety of places.

When a new recruit enters articles he may well find initial difficulty in making the transition from the classroom or lecture theatre to his 'lonely room' and his textbooks and study notes. But this transition has to be made sooner or later. After he has qualified, he will frequently be faced with problems which he will not be able to solve by going to a teacher or lecturer. The sooner he learns to use reference books, surely the better? And, after all, 'loneliness' makes it easier to develop concentration.

In short, sir, I venture to submit that the correspondence course is in more ways than one an excellent preparation for professional life; but, of course, the better the correspondence course, the better the preparation.

Yours faithfully,

London EC2. J. E. TALBOT, F.C.A.

Audit and Computers

Municipal Treasurers' Computer Conference in London

A TWO-DAY conference on the theme 'Audit and computers' was held at Millbank Tower, London, on Tuesday and Wednesday of last week by The Institute of Municipal Treasurers and Accountants. Some two hundred auditors from local authorities and public boards throughout the country attended and discussed the effect of computers on their work.

The speakers addressing the conference, which was organized by the Institute's Home Counties Chief Internal Auditors Group, were gathered from a wide field and brought with them an extensive knowledge and experience of computers.

The foundation of the conference was undoubtedly laid by Mr C. K. Davie, A.I.M.T.A., Assistant Deputy County Treasurer, West Sussex County Council, in a paper entitled 'The computer and how far the auditor can rely on it'. The development of the computer was traced briefly into the third generation now current. Modern devices in the computer, said Mr Davie, made for greater efficiency and speed, while the capacity to store information provided an important breakthrough for accountants and auditors; there were now many more built-in checks available for the auditor.

Internal Check

In the second paper, Mr R. W. L. Sims, B.SC., senior programmer, London County Council, spoke on 'The programmer – internal check and the computer'. He emphasized that it was very necessary for the auditor to be satisfied both at the planning stage and then subsequently in the day-to-day operations. A reasonable standard of internal check should be preserved in relation to the information fed into the machine and also in its operation and working. He described ways in which internal check could be applied and expressed the belief that the machine did not of itself widen the scope for fraud but gave the auditor better opportunities for control.

Mr J. H. Champion, A.I.M.T.A., Assistant County Treasurer, Lancashire County Council, dealt with the subject 'The auditor as a member of the computer planning team'. He gave adequate reasons for the auditor to be in the planning team, including the wide implications of the introduction of a computer, the fact that control may be concentrated in a few hands and that changes subsequently made were wasteful and expensive. The auditor, if he were to be effective at the planning stage, should have a working knowledge of computer language, know the capabilities of the computer and be able to check instructions given to the computer. Mr Champion went on to refer to the role of the auditor in the planning team and said that it was necessary to ensure that the information supplied to the computer was correct and to apply the basic principles of auditing to the operations that followed.

'The public board auditor and the computer' was the title of the paper given by Mr H. Abbott, F.C.A., principal assistant (audit), Yorkshire Electricity Board. The problems faced in the introduction of electronic data processing to the quarterly credit billing of electricity consumers and how this affected the Board's internal audit were very adequately dealt with in his address. He explained that there was very close liaison between the auditing and the other technical staff both in the planning of the system and then in the subsequent changes which had to be made to give effect to different tariffs and to bring in the various divisions.

The second day began with an address by Mr J. T. H. Macnair, M.C., M.A., C.A., of Thomson McLintock & Co, Chartered Accountants, London, on 'The external auditor's approach to the computer'. The speaker stressed the need for the external auditor to examine the system in operation, including the organization at the data processing centre and to ensure that any control procedures previously agreed were being carried out. Systems should be fully documented by flow charts, program and operating instructions and the auditor should ensure that any amendments were being properly recorded and authorized.

Mr J. M. Ireland, data processing development officer, British Railways, spoke on 'Internal audit and computers within a nationalized industry'. It was common knowledge that British Railways was now going through a heart-searching change and the size of the problem and something of the organization of the railways in 1963 was referred to in some detail by the speaker. The centralization of control and the development of computers within the new framework was then described and three examples were given of the use of the data processing system – reconciliation of station cash with tickets sold, centralization of superannuation funds and annuitant payments and accounting for continental passenger movement.

Inter-authority Computer Arrangements

The final address was given by Mr J. D. Hender, F.S.A.A., F.I.M.T.A., City Treasurer, Coventry, on 'Inter-authority computer arrangements – audit problems'. Inter-authority computer arrangements caused few special audit problems, he said. The reason why authorities entered into such arrangements were explained by Mr Hender and the advantages and disadvantages to both the customer-authority and the computer-authority outlined. It was essential for the audit staff to fully understand the computer system and while the computer-authority would normally supply the necessary audit cover of all transactions going through the computer, the customer-authority must reserve itself the right of its auditors to perform audit function where it was considered desirable, even though it might never have to exercise those rights. In his closing remarks, Mr Hender appealed to all local authorities to co-operate with one another to the fullest extent so that the maximum advantage and benefit could be obtained from the use of computers.

Members of the conference were glad to have the President of the Institute, Mr I. M. Cowan, M.B.E., F.S.A.A., F.I.M.T.A., at the closing stages of the proceedings and the President paid tribute to the conference chairman, Mr B. A. Brewer, A.I.M.T.A., chief internal auditor, Essex County Council, and the organizers for a very successful two-day meeting.

TAX RELIEF FOR RETIREMENT ANNUITY PREMIUMS

THE Finance Act, 1956, introduced tax relief in respect of retirement annuity premiums paid by self-employed persons and employees not in a pension scheme in respect of their whole earnings.

To obtain the relief the individual must be chargeable to tax on 'relevant earnings' from a trade, profession, vocation, office or employment, and the annuity contract must have as its main object the provision for the individual of a life annuity. Relevant earnings extend to:

(1) remuneration from an office or employment of profit; or

(2) income from property being part of the emoluments of such an office or employment; or

(3) income charged under Schedule B or Schedule D in respect of the exercise of a trade, profession or vocation; or

(4) earned income derived from patent rights.

The term does not include remuneration of a controlling director of an investment company, and a wife's earnings are distinguished from her husband's.

Subject to certain limitations, the qualifying premium paid during a year of assessment is deductible from the net relevant earnings and reduces total income liable to tax. Net relevant earnings are calculated by deducting from relevant earnings:

(1) payments made which are deductible when including earnings in total income;

(2) capital allowances; and

(3) losses on which relief has been given.

Example (1)

The profits of a sole trader for the year ended December 31st, 1963, were £6,000 before deducting capital allowances of £500. Retirement annuity premiums paid during 1963–64 was £200, and 1964–65, £400. A payment of £300 under deed of covenant was made each year.

1964–65	£
Profits after capital allowances	5,500
Payment under deed of covenant	300
	5,200
Qualifying premium	400
	£4,800

Earned income relief is restricted by reference to the qualifying premium and would be calculated on £4,800.

The maximum qualifying premium that can be deducted from net relevant earnings, apart from payments by persons born before 1916 where special provisions apply, is the lesser of £750 and 10 per cent of the net relevant earnings for the year.

X.'s share of partnership profit	8,000
Remuneration from non-pensionable employment	1,000
Wife's salary	1,500

Premium paid:

(a) £500; or

(b) £950.

The relevant earnings are £9,000 and in the first case the qualifying premium would be £500 as this falls within both limitations. In the second case the premium paid exceeds both £750 and 10 per cent of the net relevant earnings which is £900, and would be restricted to £750.

Where the restriction to £750 operates, there are no provisions for utilizing excess premiums paid against future earnings; but where the restriction operates because of insufficiency of net relevant earnings such excesses can be carried forward.

1963–64 net relevant earnings	2,000
1964–65 „ „ „	6,000
Premiums paid annually	350

Relief 1963–64: £200 being 10 per cent of £2,000, excess paid £150 available against future earnings.
Relief 1964–65: £500 being premium paid of £350 plus £150 brought forward from previous year.

Some delay may arise before the maximum qualifying premium can be ascertained as the relevant earnings cannot be determined until after the fiscal year to which they relate. To enable the taxpayer to qualify for maximum relief it is provided that where the notice of assessment on the relevant earnings is given after the end of or in the last six months of a year of assessment, the taxpayer may elect for the premiums paid within the period beginning with the end of the year of assessment and ending six months after the date on which the assessment becomes final to be related to the year prior to that in which they were paid.

Example (4)

A premium paid on June 30th, 1964, would normally qualify for relief for 1964–65. However, if the 1963–64 assessment on relevant earnings was raised on, say, November 30th, 1963, and finally agreed on April 30th, 1964, the premium, at the taxpayer's option, could be related to 1963–64.

THE INSTITUTE OF CHARTERED ACCOUNTANTS IN ENGLAND AND WALES

Courses of Oral Tuition for Articled Clerks

IN association with colleges of further education and private tutorial organizations, every district society of the Institute now arranges short full-time courses of oral tuition for prospective or newly articled clerks. Other courses are also available in the area of most societies.

The majority of courses for the current academic session 1964–65 were held last autumn, when demand was greatest. This applies particularly to introductory courses for newly articled clerks. A number of courses listed below are still available in some areas.

In Parliament

Decimal Coinage

Mr LUBBOCK asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on Her Majesty's Government's policy regarding decimal coinage.

Mr CALLAGHAN: The Government are not yet in a position to make a statement about their policy on decimal coinage.

Association of British Travel Agents: Accounts Rules

Mr PARKIN asked the President of the Board of Trade what discussions he has had with the Association of British Travel Agents on means to prevent holiday travellers being stranded through the administrative or financial failures of travel firms with slender or inadequate resources.

Mr MASON: The Association of British Travel Agents has told me that under its new Accounts Rules, adopted on October 8th, 1964, its members will be required in future to present independent accountants' statements at annual intervals for scrutiny by its Council. It also proposes to establish a fund to be available in certain circumstances to assist tourists in the event of financial default by a member of the Association.

3½ Per Cent War Loan

Mr POUNDER asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will consider converting 3½ per cent War Loan at its present value into a security bearing a higher nominal interest rate of 4 per cent or 5 per cent, thus taking account of the hardship being suffered by current holders of War Loan owing to the fall in the capital value of this security coupled with the relatively low interest yield being received by holders who purchased their holdings prior to 1952.

Mr MACDERMOT: No.

Charitable Donations

Sir KNOX CUNNINGHAM asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what consideration he has given to the suggestion that up to 10 per cent of an individual's income shall be treated as free from tax if disbursed for charitable purposes; and what action he will take in this matter.

Mr CALLAGHAN: I have noted the hon. and learned member's suggestion, but I cannot anticipate my Budget statement.

OBITUARY

L. W. Bingham, F.C.A.

It is with regret that we have learned of the death last Sunday of Mr L. W. Bingham, F.C.A., senior partner in the firm of Myers, Davies & Co, Chartered Accountants, of London.

Born in September 1899, Mr Bingham joined his firm as a junior clerk at the end of the First World War, and in 1922 he commenced to serve his articles with that firm. He was admitted to membership of The Institute of Chartered Accountants in England and Wales in 1927 and became a partner in Myers, Davies & Co in January 1938.

Mr Bingham was well known to members of the Institute as its joint auditor since April 1955 when he took up the appointment on the death of his partner, Mr John Myers, F.C.A., who had, since 1936, also been joint auditor of the Institute. Mr Bingham also acted as joint honorary auditor of The Chartered Accountants' Benevolent Association.

An enthusiastic cricketer and cyclist in his earlier years, Mr Bingham had of late been the victim of arthritis which had severely restricted his activities. He was a director of Millwall Engineering Co Ltd.

BLAGDON CONFERENCE REPORT

The full report of the proceedings of the conference on 'The education and training of articled clerks' held at The Further Education Staff College, Blagdon, last July, is available in booklet form from The Institute of Chartered Accountants in England and Wales, 55–66 Goswell Road, London EC1, price 5*s*. The report was referred to in a leading article in The Accountant of January 16th.

LONDON AND DISTRICT SOCIETY OF CHARTERED ACCOUNTANTS

Data Processing Discussion Group

'The role of management in the successful use of a computer' will be the subject of a talk to be given by Mr R. G. Dowse, F.C.A., financial controller, Dolcis Ltd, at a joint meeting of the London and District Society of Chartered Accountants' Data Processing Discussion Group and the Management Discussion Group, at the Imperial Hotel, Elizabeth Street, London SW1, at 5.30 for 6.15 p.m. next Tuesday.

The remainder of the Group's spring programme, which will have as its theme 'Computers and the practising accountant', is as follows:

February 9th: 'Registration by computer'. A speaker from the registration department, Lloyds Bank Ltd, will explain in general terms the way in which a computer can be used and describe his experience of using a computer for share registration.

March 9th: 'Keeping clients' time and fee records with the aid of a computer service bureau'. Mr P. C. Forbes, F.C.A., of Turquand, Youngs & Co, will describe how his firm are using a service bureau computer for maintaining client time and fee records, and discuss the problems and advantages in the light of his firm's experience.

April 13th: 'Five feasible frauds'. Mr Julian Peppercorn, of I.B.M. (United Kingdom) Ltd, will outline a number of ways in which he believes fraud can be perpetrated on a computer.

All the above meetings will be at 6 for 6.30 p.m. at a venue to be announced later. It is hoped that these discussions will be of general interest to practising accountants in the London area, and chartered accountants who are not members of the Data Processing Discussion Group may attend (subject to limitation of accommodation). They should address their applications to Mr J. P. Hough, A.C.A., 4 Copthall Avenue, London EC2.

WAR DAMAGE OFFICE

The Technical Centre at Government Offices, Bishopsgate, Norwich, Norfolk (Norfolk 22P), has been closed as from January 29th. All correspondence should now be addressed to Inland Revenue, War Damage Office, Eagle House, 90/96 Cannon Street, London EC4.

LOCAL AUTHORITY SERVICES

During the year ended March 31st, 1964, there were on average 65,029 children in the care of local authorities and 92,654 old people in local authority welfare homes, an increase of 2,114 and 2,855 respectively on the previous year. This is shown in two statistical returns on welfare services and children's services published by The Institute of Municipal Treasurers and Accountants and The Society of County Treasurers.

The children in care represent one in every 200 children under 18, and the number in old people's homes one in every 61 people aged 65 or over.

The weekly cost of boarding a child out in 1963–64 was £2 11*s* 7*d* compared to £10 14*s* 11*d* a week for those accommodated in homes. The average cost a week for accommodating an old person in a home was £7 15*s* 2*d*.

The net expenditure which had to be met from rates and general grants totalled £26,108,966 in the case of children and £35,406,659 for welfare services. This was equivalent to a cost to the average household of 7½*d* and 10½*d* per week.

Copies of the above returns are obtainable from The Institute of Municipal Treasurers and Accountants, 1 Buckingham Place, Westminster, London SW1, price 5*s* each.

ECONOMIC CONDITIONS OVERSEAS

Two further booklets in the 1964–65 series dealing with economic conditions in member and associated countries of the Organization for Economic Co-operation and Development have recently been issued covering Iceland and Germany. Copies of the booklets are available from H.M. Stationery Office, price 5*s* each.

CORRECTIONS

On page 105 of last week's issue we reviewed three 'Pillars of Management Accounting' books by Mr E. C. D. Evans, B.SC.(ECON.), F.A.C.C.A., A.C.I.S., A.M.B.I.M., stating incorrectly, however, that they are published by Macdonald & Evans Ltd, London. The publishers of these books are Macdonald & Co (Publishers) Ltd, 2 Portman Street, London W1.

In the reference to Death Duty Mitigation by H. D. Argent, on page 58 (col. 2) of the issue of January 16th, it was stated that the first edition of this book cost 35*s* and had 287 pages, while the second edition comprising 237 pages cost 40*s*; it is regretted that the numbers of pages in the respective editions were inadvertently transposed.

GEE'S WORLD MANAGEMENT SERIES

Management Information and Accounting

R. WARWICK DOBSON, C.A., F.C.W.A.

★ A recommended book for the Certificate in Management Information, the examination for which is being held jointly by The Institute of Chartered Accountants in England and Wales and The Institute of Chartered Accountants in Ireland. Written for accountants from the point of view of managements' requirements not only for accounting information, but for information of all kinds. Dealing with many decisions both major and minor which managers of all businesses require to make, the book shows the place which accounting information – both financial and cost – occupies in the complete network of management information.

OVERSEAS

is expanding its financial departments at the Brussels Area Headquarters and is establishing four new executive staff positions.

1. FINANCIAL ANALYST

We are seeking a thoroughly experienced financial analyst to work with a group of our companies on all aspects of their financial activities, forecasts, profit development, forward planning, etc. He will work closely with the managements of these companies and serve in a liaison capacity between them and the area headquarters management. Considerable analytical skill is required.

Knowledge of either a Scandinavian language or Italian would be advantageous, though not essential.

Amount of travel involved is about 25 per cent.

2. MANAGEMENT AUDITOR

This man must have very good experience with management control systems, preferably in several countries. The position requires the ability to work in German or French. The candidate must be free to travel very extensively.

3. DEPUTY CHIEF ACCOUNTANT for one of our subsidiaries based in Brussels with branches throughout Europe. The candidate will assist with the general accounting activities of the head office. He will prepare monthly and annual statements as well as special analytical and financial reports, budgets and forecasts. Expected travel 10 per cent. Fluency in French is required in this position.

4. SENIOR SYSTEMS ANALYST

to assist our European subsidiary companies in their methods and procedures work and to conduct systems studies. Assignments in various European countries will have a duration varying from a few weeks to a few months. Our man must have experience in systems work resulting in measurable cost reduction. Ability to work without direct supervision is a requirement. Proficiency in Spanish or Italian is desirable.

The men we are looking for are between 27 and 40 years of age and have a university degree or its equivalent.

For internationally minded financial and methods experts these positions offer great opportunities for further advancement and above average salaries amply justifying moving abroad. The positions carry substantial fringe benefits such as extra legal pension and liberal schooling allowances for children.

The company also provides a yearly home leave with free air transportation to place of origin.

The jobs are based in Brussels – where excellent housing can be easily rented – but other locations in Europe could also be discussed for the positions where heavy travel is involved.

Please send your reply in English (preferably typewritten) to Mr Per Berndtson, ITT Europe Inc., 11 Boulevard de l'Empereur, Brussels 1, Belgium, including a curriculum vitae, information covering present salary level, earliest starting date plus if possible a photo. Please indicate which position or positions you are applying for. (They are all within the same salary range.)

Your application will be treated in strictest confidence and no outside checks or contacts whatsoever will be made prior to your consent.

ITT in Europe since 1879 – employing more than one hundred and twenty-five thousand Europeans – twenty-seven companies – 105 plants – manufacturing in virtually every country in free Europe.

THE JOHN HOLT GROUP has two vacancies for

MANAGEMENT ACCOUNTANTS

in its rapidly expanding group of companies in the Wine and spirit trade. Those appointed will join a young and vigorous team and will be required to make a substantial contribution to the group by the application of modern management accounting techniques. The group already operates budgetary control and is now planning for the greater use of electronic data processing. Both positions offer considerable scope for personal advancement.

SENIOR MANAGEMENT ACCOUNTANT

Salary to be negotiated

Should be a chartered accountant in his early thirties, but thoroughly familiar with modern management accounting techniques and have had some commercial or consultancy experience.

ASSISTANT ACCOUNTANT

Starting Salary: £1,000 p.a.

Should be a recently-qualified chartered accountant who believes that accountancy can be an aid to management.

Both vacancies are situated in Liverpool, although there will be a certain amount of travelling in the U.K. The company operates a generous contributory pension scheme.

Replies, which will be treated in strict confidence, should give full details of education, experience and positions held, with dates and salaries, and be addressed to Group Personnel Manager, 250 India Buildings, Liverpool 2.

CHARTERED OR COST AND WORKS ACCOUNTANT

age up to 30 required by C.A.V. Limited for work on administration development and organization and methods. The work requires an imaginative approach to a wide range of projects, involving the application of data processing and other modern management techniques. The job is suitable for a young accountant who wishes a broader career in industry which is not restricted to the accountancy field. The successful applicant will be given ample scope for training and development, with the opportunity of promotion to senior management positions. Previous industrial experience is not essential. OVERSEAS

A multitude of professional vacancies from Hamburgh to Hong Kong, Amsterdam to Angola. Some commercial posts scattered here and there, too. Salaries from nothing to anything.

THE POST OF THE WEEK

One of the peculiarities of the British textile trade is its usage of credit notes. This is due to the fact that it is one of the most fiercely competitive trades and therefore one which is subject to a disproportionately high rate of 'fall-out'. The manufacturing suppliers, of course, recognize the exigencies of trading in such a field and therefore allow extensive credit facilities. However, a keen watch must be maintained on all potential liabilities.

It is with this latter point in mind that a large textile manufacturing organization, based in London W1, desire to appoint a credit accountant.

The selected candidate will be a chartered accountant of not less than forty years of age. He will have had extensive experience in liquidations, and will be required to control all the credit aspects of the group. This includes debtor control, investigation of bankruptcies, etc.

For this senior appointment the salary level to be discussed will be around the £3,000 p.a. mark. Candidates should already be in reach of this.

ROWLAND'S TRUST ACCOUNTS

Third edition

By Peter M. B. Rowland, B.A., LL.B., Barrister-at-law

This successful book provides lawyers, accountants, and students (being recommended reading for the Institute of Legal Executives and The Law Society's Examinations) with a thorough treatment of the law principles and practical application of trust accountancy. This third edition has been rearranged to clarify still further the method of accounting which has been adopted, new legislation such as the Trustee Investments Act 1961, has been dealt with, references to many new cases are included and the unique method of binding is of course retained.

ACCORDING to the latest report from the National Economic Development Council entitled Investment Appraisal[1] 'many firms appear to apply criteria for assessing investment projects which have little relevance to the measurement of the expected rate of return to the capital invested'. In consequence, the report avers, investment decisions in such companies may be made over-cautiously. The result is a misallocation of scarce resources and a slow rate of economic growth.

The main criticisms of what the report describes as these 'less satisfactory' current methods of investment appraisal is that firms use 'a very rough and ready, and frequently arbitrary, way of allowing for expected adverse changes in relative costs and prices'. The criteria used to measure the prospective return on a proposed investment, states the report, are based on irrelevant criteria for the measurement of the prospective return on capital. It quotes the Richardson Committee's report on Turnover Taxation (Cmnd 2300) that many business men ignore tax measures designed to influence investment policies when they are framing their capital programmes. That report commented that it was 'broadly agreed that factors other than taxation largely determined investment decisions'. (Read as it stands, without qualification, this statement is obviously true.) It is this failure to assess returns on capital after, rather than before, tax that is a major weakness of many current and conventional methods of evaluating the merits of particular investments, comments the N.E.D.C. report.

There are other criticisms, too. For example, conventional methods seldom make any allowance for the fact that as an asset ages, so the rate of return tends to fall. Likewise, the earnings potential of assets after the pay-back period, i.e. once the capital cost has been met, are not taken into account. But the main criticisms are clear enough. First, conventional methods do not take account of the benefits of the large capital allowances arising from their timing, i.e. they are heavily concentrated into the early years of the asset's life; for example, for every £100 invested in plant a firm will get half of it back within the first four years. What will happen under the proposed corporation tax remains to be seen. Secondly, conventional methods ignore the timing of the cash flows; some investments yield a return earlier than others and when interest on the capital is taken into account, the quicker the capital outlay is recouped the better.

relative merits of alternative investments, states the N.E.D.C. report, 'are avoided by the use of the discounted cash flow (D.C.F.) technique'. Readers of this journal will be familiar with the basic principles of D.C.F. which have been expounded and publicized in a number of articles in recent years[1].

The merit of D.C.F. for evaluating the profitability of alternative investments as compared with conventional methods is clear. First, it necessitates a detailed appraisal of all the known facts and future uncertainties. This, in itself, can be quite useful as an exercise to clarify the mind. Thus, the first stage is to estimate the prospective earnings of the proposed investment during its probable lifetime. The second stage is to work out what the asset will cost, either in interest paid if the purchase money is borrowed, or in interest forgone if internal finance is possible. This sort of exercise is done with any of the existing methods and, one suspects, with a good deal more realism than the report's exposition of this part of the D.C.F. exercise which illustrates the main argument. Readers will be amused, to put it no more strongly, to find in this illustration that the annual profit (before and after tax!) from the investment is estimated for a mere fifteen years. The report later concedes that 'the inevitable inaccuracies of any judgements about the more distant future make it inappropriate to attempt too meticulous an attribution of earnings year by year in the later years of the plant's life' (our italics). On the other hand, the report states that 'if no explicit assumption is made about the course of earnings, no satisfactory appraisal can be made'.

One could take this argument with the proverbial pinch of salt and agree, as other exponents of D.C.F. have done, that one must make the best estimate possible. After all, whatever method of evaluating an investment is used, some guess must be made about its prospective earnings. In practice, however, many ordinary business men take the rational view that unless they can feel reasonably confident of writing off the entire capital cost in three to five years, they do not waste time crystal gazing.

This 'rough and ready' method means that many investments which might prove profitable in the longer run are not made. The N.E.D.C. report comments that the available evidence suggests that many businesses will not invest unless they can foresee a minimum return on capital of about 15 per cent. Hence the company and the economy are both losers. It is the merit of the D.C.F. technique that it evaluates the true return on a prospective investment by taking into account the effect of the capital allowances and the future cash flow[2]. The report illustrates this point with an example where the apparent gross return is only 4·3 per cent but which the D.C.F. technique reveals is equivalent to 7 per cent net on the capital laid out.

No one would deny the utility of the D.C.F. technique relatively to other less precise methods. At least it should be used to supplement the calculations on the conventional bases. For the large organization which enjoys a dominant position in its market and can therefore make a reasonably realistic forecast of its return on capital for the next few years, the D.C.F. method will help to sort out the most favourable investment. Where such forecasts are little better than guesses, as they are with the majority of companies, then the margin of error which must be allowed for in deciding whether to invest or not is often so large that the use of pseudo-scientific projections would be just so much pretentious nonsense. After all, the business may not even make enough profits against which to set the capital allowances.

The bulk of investment in the United Kingdom is undertaken by the large companies and the public sector. Such bodies are already familiar with modern forecasting techniques, although judging by the results of some past investments, not least by the nationalized industries, they need more than D.C.F. to guide them. The average business man and accountant reading the N.E.D.C. report will doubtless agree that D.C.F. can be useful. He will also wonder why the N.E.D.C. is trying to do the work of a technical college tutor in charge of a course in management. If the N.E.D.C. really believes that its resources should be allocated to preparing this report rather than examining the really urgent problems besetting the economy, then the sooner that organization applies D.C.F. methods to the allocation of its own resources, the better.

[1] For example, to quote the most recent issues: May 4th, 1963; April 4th and June 6th, 1964.

[2] It can be used both for the short- and long-lived investment. For the reader who wants a clearer exposition than that given in this report, see A. N. Alfred, Discounted Cash Flow and Corporate Planning. Woolwich Polytechnic. 3*s* 6*d* net.

Continuous Law Reform

MENTION was briefly made in last week's issue of the publication of the Law Commissions Bill the object of which is to provide for the constitution of Commissions for the reform of the law. It is interesting to see how closely the wording of the Bill follows recommendations contained in a book edited by the present Lord Chancellor (GERALD GARDINER, Q.C., as he then was) and ANDREW MARTIN, PH.D., which was published in 1963[1].

The two editors said it was difficult to think of a rational argument against renaming and reorganizing the LORD CHANCELLOR's office as a Ministry of Justice. However, in the view of the irrational opposition which the editors feared, they recommended that, instead, the office be strengthened and reorganized by setting up within it a strong unit concerned exclusively with law reform, including codification in certain sections of it. Seeing that the LORD CHANCELLOR himself 'is invariably one of the most heavily overworked Ministers in the Cabinet', the head of the proposed unit was to carry the rank of Minister of State whom it would be logical and convenient to call the Vice-Chancellor. He would preside over a committee of not less than five highly-qualified lawyers, whom the editors called 'Law Commissioners' although they attached no importance to this name. These would be full time but their salaries would not be laid down since they would be governed by considerations of age, previous earnings, and duration of office. These views are faithfully reflected in the Bill, although the chairman of the Commissioners is not to have the title of Vice-Chancellor, nor ministerial rank. The book proposed that the chief responsibility of the Law Commissioners would be to review, bring up to date and keep up to date the 'general law': common law, equity, and also that part of statute law which did not fall within the province of any particular Government department.

The functions of the new Law Commissions under the Bill (there are to be two Commissions, one for England and Northern Ireland and one for Scotland) are set out more precisely than in the book. They are:

> 'to take and keep under review all the law with which they are respectively concerned with a view to its systematic development and reform, including in particular the codification of rules of law, the elimination of anomalies, the repeal of obsolete and unnecessary enactments, the reduction in the number of separate enactments and generally the simplification and modernization of the law, and for that purpose:
> (a) to receive and consider any proposals for the reform of the law which may be made or referred to them;
> (b) to prepare and submit to the Minister (i.e. the LORD CHANCELLOR in England and the SECRETARY OF STATE FOR SCOTLAND and the LORD ADVOCATE in Scotland) from time to time programmes for the examination of different branches of the law with a view to reform, including recommendations as to the agency (whether the Commission or another body) by which any such examination should be carried out;
> (c) to undertake, pursuant to any such recommendations approved by the Minister, the examination of particular branches of the law and the formulation, by means of draft Bills or otherwise, of proposals for reform therein;
> (d) to prepare comprehensive programmes of consolidation and statute law revision, and to undertake the preparation of draft Bills pursuant to any such programme approved by the Minister;
> (e) to provide assistance to Government departments and, at the request of the Minister, to other authorities or bodies concerned with proposals for the reform or amendment of any branch of the law;
> (f) to obtain such information as to the legal systems of other countries as appears to the Commissioners likely to facilitate the performance of any of their functions.

Each Commission will also have to make an annual report to the Minister who must lay it before Parliament with his comments, if he has any. The Minister must also lay before Parliament any programmes prepared by the Commission and approved by him, also any proposals for reform formulated by the Commission. Finally, the Commissions must act in consultation with each other. This is particularly necessary seeing that clause 1 (5) withholds from the English Commission consideration of 'the law of Scotland' – a prohibition which could be awkward when the English Commission was considering, say, income tax which applies equally throughout Great Britain and Northern Ireland.

The Bill properly draws a distinction between codification on the one hand, and consolidation on the other – the latter being termed 'the reduction in the number of separate enactments'. The book is rather less accurate. It says (page 11):

> 'There is an extremely strong case for codification of English law in the sense of reducing to one statute, or a small collection of statutes, the whole of the law on any particular subject. The relatively few codes we have: the Bills of Exchange Act, the Parnership Act, the Sale of Goods Act, the Larceny Act and more recently the Income Tax Act, 1952, have all proved their worth; they have saved much time and trouble to clients and their legal advisers, and in all probability they have reduced appreciably the number of cases which have had to be brought to the Courts on points of law.'

Whatever may be said of the other Acts mentioned, the Income Tax Act, 1952, was certainly not a codifying Act, it merely consolidated a number of separate Acts into one. No attempt was made to express the effect of judicial decisions (pre-1952) in the new Act. One obvious example is the Law Shipping case. Moreover it is still necessary from time to time to look at the previous Acts in order to find out what the Act of 1952 is trying to say.

Another section of the book, which deals specifically with Revenue law, suggests that there should be a statutory requirement that the income tax and estate duty provisions of each new Finance Act must be incorporated, say, within three to six months of their entry into force, in a consolidating Act 'which will then be up to date in every particular'. The authors do not believe that this would place any great additional burden on parliamentary draftsmen. 'It is a comparatively simple task.' It will be interesting to see, now that Lord GARDINER is the Lord Chancellor, whether by next winter there will be a new Act on the Statute Book which not only consolidates all income tax and profits tax law, but estate duty law as well; or whether this 'comparatively simple task' will be too much for the present force of draftsmen.

The same section of the book advocates a 'true' capital gains tax as contrasted with the short-term gains tax introduced in 1962. In this respect the book's recommendation has already been adopted by the Government. Indeed, the present CHANCELLOR OF THE EXCHEQUER has repeated almost word for word a statement in the book that restrictions should be placed on taking what is 'really' income in the guise of capital. The further suggestions of 'one taxpayer – one charge', and a universal current year basis, already rejected by the Royal Commission, appear in the book; but it seems unlikely that they will be adopted. One good suggestion in the book is that the cost of appealing against assessments, including the cost of professional assistance, should be an allowable deduction. Another good suggestion is that where a taxpayer succeeds before the Appeal Commissioners, but the Revenue appeal to the High Court or above, he should have his costs paid by the Revenue in any event.

The book makes a strong attack on discretionary settlements which enable families to avoid surtax and estate duty. Therefore it may well be that further legislation will be enacted this year to restrict further these benefits.

The odd suggestion is made that 'the preferential treatment of earned income should be limited to a maximum amount'. There has, in fact, never been a time when earned income relief was not limited to a maximum.

There is a succinct account in the book of the shortcomings and abuses of company law, and some useful suggestions for reform. The interesting point is made that when the stock exchange decides to suspend dealings in a certain company's shares, those shares become to all intents and purposes unsaleable. Have the holders any remedy against the stock exchange if the suspension was unwarranted?

If the authors had their way, voteless equity shares would go. Also shareholders would be able to obtain a complete picture of the assets of a company, even if it be a banking or insurance company. The authors point to the considerable disparity which not infrequently exists between the position as revealed by published accounts in the ordinary way, and the position as disclosed by the directors when resisting a take-over bid.

The Proposed 'Dividend Withholding Tax'

CONTRIBUTED

THE Chancellor of the Exchequer has announced the introduction of a corporation tax on profits which, in relation to a corporation which has a December 31st accounting year, will be charged for the first time on the 1965 profits. The rate of tax has not been fixed but 35 per cent is considered to be likely. The Chancellor has also stated that corporations will be required to deduct income tax at the standard rate from dividends and other distributions of profit and to pay that income tax over to the United Kingdom Inland Revenue. This implies that he proposes a 'dividend withholding tax'. This withholding tax will apply to distributions made after April 5th, 1966. Again the rate has not been fixed but is likely to be at 41·25 per cent. Where a corporation distributes the whole of its 1965 profits, the tax levied will be:

	£	£	Tax paid £
1965 Profit		1,000,000
Corporation tax (35 per cent) ..		350,000	350,000
		650,000
Dividend	650,000
Less Withholding 41·25 per cent	268,125	(381,875)
Withholding payable to United Kingdom Inland Revenue ..		(268,125)	268,125

From the corporation's standpoint, if no profits are distributed, tax is paid at 35 per cent. On the other hand, if the whole of a year's profits is distributed, tax is paid at 61·8 per cent. There is a tax incentive to retain profits in the business.

No liability exists in respect of withholding tax unless and until a distribution of profit is made. When a distribution is made, a liability to pay the withholding tax arises.

As the withholding tax does not become a liability before the date of the distribution, it follows that at any particular balance sheet date:

(a) the potential future levy of withholding tax on retained profits does not constitute a liability; and

(b) any amount set aside to meet a possible future liability to withholding tax would not be a 'provision' within paragraph 27 (1) (a), Schedule VIII, Companies Act, 1948, but would be a reserve. Furthermore, it would not be a 'charge for United Kingdom taxation on profits' required to be shown as such in the profit and loss account under paragraph 12 (1) (c) of Schedule VIII.

Profit and Loss Account

Treatment of Dividends

It seems clear that if a dividend is paid or provided for in a particular year's profit and loss account, the gross dividend must be effectively charged. Hitherto the practice has been to show only the net dividends, due to the nature and basis of taxation for year's prior to the introduction of corporation tax. There appears to be no reason to continue the net dividend basis, since this would involve an additional and separate charge for the withholding tax. Exceptionally, where a dividend is declared free of tax, it may be preferable to show the actual dividend payable (described as 'free of tax') and to make a provision for the withholding tax in addition but separately.

After April 5th, 1966, a company cannot actually distribute to its shareholders an amount equivalent to its after-tax profits for a particular period, unless it drains from reserves an amount equal to the withholding tax attributable to the distribution. Taxation therefore creates a break-even point, namely, the point at which actual distributions, plus withholding tax, exactly equal the after corporation tax profits.

Balance Sheet

Treatment of Retained Profits

Under the previous basis of taxation, the net profit (after tax, dividends and transfers to reserves) has been carried to the balance sheet, added to 'Revenue reserves', and treated as part of the shareholders' equity.

It is now necessary to consider whether this treatment should be modified in future.

The 'Revenue reserves', including the credit balance on profit and loss account, are regarded by readers of the balance sheet as being available for distribution to shareholders. If any distribution is made, the shareholders will not receive the declared sum because of the deduction of withholding tax.

As already stated, withholding tax does not become a liability until a distribution is made. It follows that the potential liability to withholding tax on future distributions (if any) is not a liability. Nor does the accumulated amount constitute a contingent liability as it is not a liability and it cannot, except in most unusual circumstances, become a liability except by some decision of the company. Nevertheless, the company (or in certain cases of amalgamations its successor) can never divest itself of the possibility of ultimately becoming liable to the United Kingdom Inland Revenue for the accumulated potential withholding tax.

It is true that the full potential liability will only arise in the majority of cases in the event of a liquidation. A balance sheet is, however, prepared as on a particular date on a going concern basis and it does not purport to show the effect of the many factors which may arise on winding up. On the other hand, where the whole of a company's after corporation tax profits are distributed in kind, a liability to withholding tax can arise which could only be met out of prior years' reserves, including the credit balance on profit and loss account. Similar considerations will apply in the case of distributions of capital profits.

Accounting Treatment

In order to present a true and fair view of the company's financial position to its shareholders, it is suggested that the amount of withholding tax attributable to the gross retained earnings should be shown as a separate heading in the balance sheet as 'Reserve for future tax'. Only the net (actually distributable) retained earnings would be included in 'Revenue reserves'. If this suggestion is not followed, it is considered that at least a note should appear on the balance sheet clearly indicating that there is a potential liability in respect of future distributions and stating the estimated maximum tax liability which could arise.

As regards the profit and loss account, the last item shown will normally be 'Balance carried forward' or 'Profit retained'. This balance is carried to 'Revenue reserves'. There appear to be two methods by which the potential withholding tax on the retained earnings can be treated. First, the withholding tax attributable to the retained profit for the year could be charged in the appropriation section of the profit and loss account and carried to the 'Reserve for future tax'. Only the net (distributable) retained earnings would be carried to 'Revenue reserves'. Alternatively, the gross retained earnings could be carried to 'Revenue reserves' and a deduction made (in the balance sheet) from the 'Revenue reserves' for the withholding tax attributable to the retained earnings which would then be shown as 'Reserve for future tax'.

Possible Retrospective Effect

Profits Earned in Pre-corporation Tax Periods

It is not known at this stage whether tax must be withheld from all dividends paid after April 5th, 1966, or whether the withholding tax will apply only to dividends out of corporation tax periods. In the latter case a LIFO basis seems to be likely. It is expected that dividends will generally be related to the period in which paid with possibly a six months' grace period. Dividends in excess of current profits will be regarded as being for the immediate preceding period and so on backwards.

If withholding tax is applied to all dividends, it follows that United Kingdom corporations will have been subjected to a potential liability of 41·25 per cent of all their retained earnings at one stroke on April 6th, 1966. Already those same earnings have borne United Kingdom tax at varying rates in the prior years when earned. In recent years the normal rate for profits in excess of £12,000 has been 53·75 per cent. The potential cumulative tax rate levied on recent profits would therefore be 73 per cent. If a surtax payer (paying at the highest rate) were to receive a dividend on this basis the total tax impact is 98 per cent.

On the assumption that the withholding is only applied to dividends out of corporation tax periods, and that a LIFO basis is used to allocate dividends, it is suggested that the 'Revenue reserves' in the balance sheet should be divided into two parts. Using the expected withholding rate of 41·25 per cent, the parts would be, (1) 41·25 per cent of the corporation tax period's net profits would be 'Reserve for future tax' to be shown separately and not included in shareholders' equity or as 'Revenue reserves', and (2) the balance would be 'Revenue reserves' (actually available for distribution).

The division of the 'Revenue reserves', as suggested, should not, in theory, prove too difficult. A running record would be required. It may be that the legislation will follow the lines adopted for overseas trade corporations which lay down rules for allocating distributions between exempt trading income and investment income. On the other hand, if the withholding tax is applicable to all dividends after April 5th, 1966, it is suggested that the whole of the 'Revenue reserves' be split in the ratio of 41·25 per cent (Reserve for future tax) and 58·75 per cent (Revenue reserves). The same treatment would not be applicable to 'Capital reserves', since these are by definition not distributable.

Timing of Dividends

The Chancellor has stated that 'special provisions will be introduced to deal with possible attempts at forestalling as regards dividends'. Perhaps what he has in mind here is that, using 1964 as a base, and viewing dividends paid after the beginning of the first corporation tax period and before April 5th, 1966, but related to the first corporation tax period, any increase will be retrospectively charged to withholding tax. Adjustments in the comparison of the dividends would be required, (1) where there has been an increase or decrease in share capital, and (2) where the length of the accounting periods differ.

As regards the effective date of dividends, it is likely that they will be regarded as due for withholding tax purposes, (1) on the day of the declaration where declared at an annual general meeting, or (2) on the date they are paid in other cases. There may be a provision to date dividends from the time of a public announcement of proposed dividend by the directors.

Losses in Pre-corporation Tax Periods

Where a company has accumulated losses in pre-corporation tax periods which are followed by profits in corporation tax periods, distribution of the current profits may be subject to withholding tax, without reference to the prior losses. However, on a liquidation, it is considered that if the prior losses equalled the post profits, no withholding would be applied, because the shareholders would merely receive repayment of the share capital.

Distribution of Capital Profits

Since capital profits will either be subject to corporation tax or capital gains tax, it seems likely that withholding tax will be applied to distributions of such profits.

Although 'Capital reserves' are, by definition, not distributable, if at some stage such reserves are transferred to 'Revenue reserves' it would be consistent to show a portion of the transferred amount separately from shareholders' equity as 'Reserve for future tax'.

Even profits which are exempt from both taxes might be subject to withholding tax.

Distribution In Specie

It is probable that the market value of the assets distributed will be the basis for withholding tax and that the company will be required to pay to the Revenue 41·25 per cent of such market value. It would be regarded as a free-of-tax dividend paid in kind. This might apply to reorganizations of share capital, but it is hoped that no withholding tax will be required where no change of beneficial ownership (direct or indirect) occurs.

Arrears of Preference Dividends

Where cumulative preference dividends have not been paid due to an insufficiency of profits, it seems likely that these may be caught by the withholding tax provisions. It will be remembered that, in pre-March 31st, 1958, profits tax periods, the Revenue were willing to spread the arrears back only in very special circumstances.

Capitalization followed by Reduction of Capital

If reserves are capitalized by means of a bonus issue it is expected that a subsequent reduction in capital would involve the corporation in a liability to withholding tax at the time of the reduction. It follows that the liability must be set up at the time of the reduction and sufficient retained profits must be in hand out of which to set up the liability. The basis of the withholding tax may be the amount of the capital reduction in balance sheet terms.

Redemption of Preference Shares

Provided the preference shares were issued for full consideration, it is unlikely that withholding tax will apply. If the preference shares were the result of a bonus issue and later redeemed, they must be redeemed out of profits and withholding tax is expected to be levied. The payment of a premium on redemption may be subject to withholding tax.

Loans, Grants or Other Distributions

It is conceivable that the making of loans, grants and other similar distributions will attract withholding tax on the lines already in operation for overseas trade corporations. Problems would then arise on the repayment of such loans etc.

Director-controlled Companies

Excess Remuneration etc.

In the case of director-controlled companies, it is extremely unlikely that remuneration voted in excess of certain limits will be regarded as being a dividend to which dividend withholding tax applies.

It is expected that unreasonable rents, travelling expenses, interest, patent royalties to a director, etc., disallowed for corporation tax purposes will not be treated as dividends.

Current Accounts

It is expected that loans to a director of a director-controlled company and loans to shareholders will be treated as distributions, but that a set-off will be allowed for amounts due to the director in arriving at the basis for withholding tax.

Group Elections

It is considered probable that provisions will be introduced to permit group elections for corporation tax. It may be that withholding tax from dividends will not be required in such cases but the election will be irrevocable.

In these cases there may be legislation in connection with dividends paid by a parent company, (1) partly out of a subsidiary's pre-corporation tax profits, and partly out of its corporation tax profits, (2) partly and similarly out of the parent company's profits. It may be necessary to legislate on whether part of the dividend has tax withheld and part does not or whether the whole dividend is subject. The difficulties involved are considerable and may be insurmountable leading to the thought that withholding tax may be applied to all distributions after April 5th, 1966.

It has been suggested earlier that a reserve be set up separately from 'Revenue reserves', so that the potential withholding tax is shown. It is probable that withholding will be required even in the case of inter-group dividends, but it is possible that the recipient may be permitted to reclaim the tax suffered. If the suggestion is adopted of splitting the 'Revenue reserves', the consolidated balance sheet of the group will incorporate the appropriate figures and show a true and fair view, even if there are minority interests. The problems in this area may set up a trend towards branch operations, rather than doing business through subsidiaries.

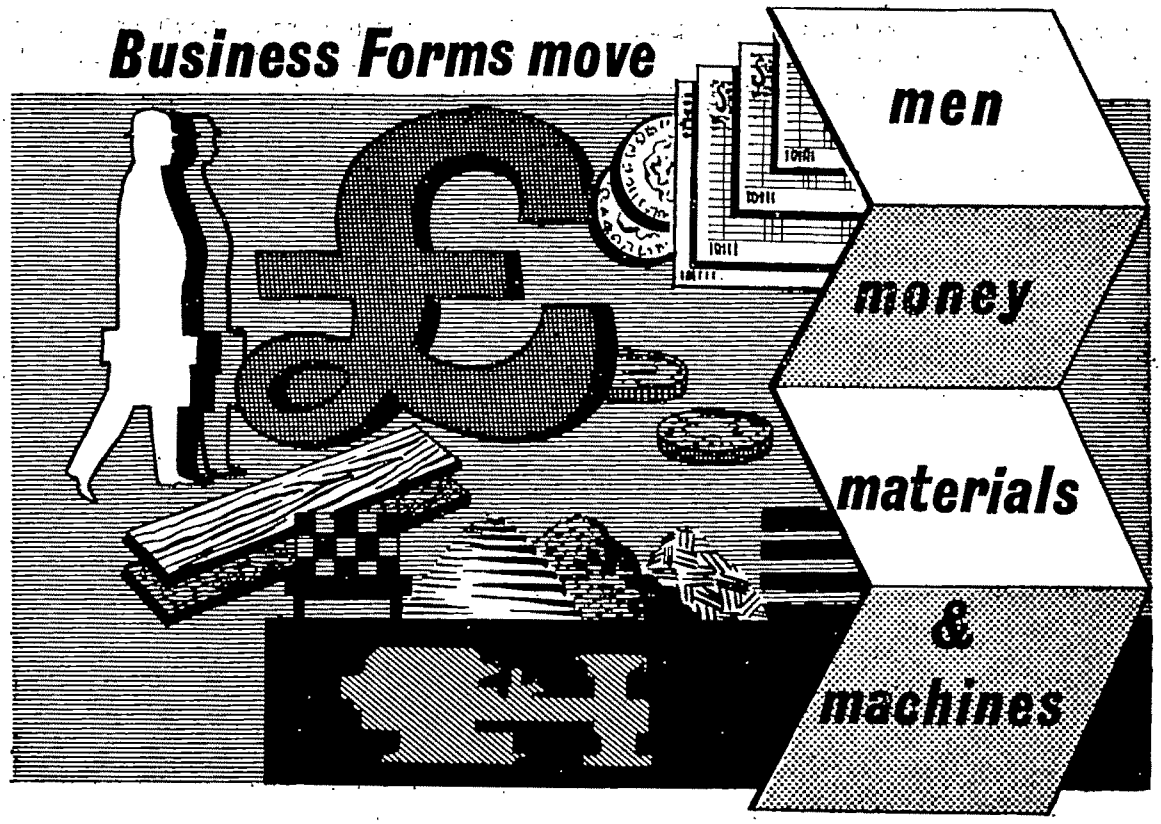
Amalgamations and Acquisitions

Similar difficulties may arise on amalgamations in deciding the maximum amount of accumulated earnings which are subject to withholding tax. There may be considerable problems in connection with pre-acquisition profits which, although not legally free for distribution, are to be regarded as free for distribution currently from a withholding tax standpoint and thus providing a current fund to which withholding tax would be applied.

In the case of reorganizations of the structure of groups, it is possible that capital gains may arise and that these will be taxable, unless a prior clearance is obtained from the Revenue. Similarly, there may be deemed distributions of profit unless clearance is obtained.

Liquidation

It is expected that all payments to shareholders, whether in cash or in the form of assets made during liquidation, will be regarded as distributions to which withholding tax applies, except



(1) possibly to the extent that pre-corporation tax profits are distributed; and

(2) to the extent that the distributions represent a return of paid up share capital or premiums which were paid in cash.

Where the liquidation is part of a scheme of reorganizing a group of companies, it is expected that, subject to obtaining a clearance, exemption from withholding tax will be given.

Non-residents

If the suggestions are followed, non-resident shareholders (including foreign parents of United Kingdom subsidiaries) will be most concerned at the increase in the charge for tax from 53·75 per cent to 61·8 per cent. When you add the possibility of prior reserves being subjected to withholding tax, we must expect bitter reactions. It is possible that a special rate of withholding tax will apply to non-resident shareholders but this might require re-negotiation of tax treaties. As regards United Kingdom branches of foreign corporations, the profits of the branch may be deemed to be distributed, attracting 61·8 per cent tax. Alternatively, a special rate of corporation tax may be adopted.

Growth Shares in a Balance Sheet

by D. C. BEATON, C.A.

THE principle of valuing fixed assets in a balance sheet is cost less provision for depreciation or diminution in value, not market value. The reason for this is that a fixed asset is not expected to be sold but to be used in the business until worn out. In a continuing business the cost of a fixed asset can be regarded as deferred revenue expenditure to be allocated to each future accounting period in proportion to the benefit received in each accounting period from the use of the asset. In each successive balance sheet there appears, therefore, the unallocated balance of cost, which is another way of describing cost less provision for depreciation.

Cost, in the writer's opinion, should not be historical cost but cost in terms of the present purchasing power of the currency; historical cost being converted to reflect the change in purchasing power of money since acquisition of the asset. In the same way, accumulated provision for depreciation should be in terms of the present purchasing power of the currency, each past year's provision being converted to reflect the rise or fall in purchasing power between the accounting period in which provision was made and the current accounting period.

The principle of valuing current assets in a balance sheet is cost, or if market value is less than cost, then market value. The reason for the basis being cost, where market value is greater than cost, is that although a current asset is expected to be sold or realized in the ordinary course of business, the principle of accounting is that credit is taken for profit on sale when the sale takes place. The reason for value at market value where market value is less than cost, is the rule of caution in accounting whereby a loss on sale which occurs in the subsequent accounting period may be provided for in the preceding balance sheet in the interest of financial prudence and of avoiding the possibility of insolvency with the attendant risk of going out of business.

In textbooks and other writings on accountancy there are found references to exceptional circumstances in which the value of fixed assets may be written up from cost to a higher figure. An example would be where a new partner or shareholder is introduced into a business on the basis of the existing financial state of affairs of the business. Another way of stating the fundamental reason for the basic principle that fixed assets are not to be valued in a balance sheet at above cost, is that it does not accord with accounting theory to take into account an appreciation in value where there is no physical or tangible increase in the asset. There can, however, be the exception to the general rule where, in fact, there has been a tangible addition to the asset. For example, if a property were let on lease with an obligation upon the lessee to incur expenditure on adding to or improving the property, where the title in the addition or the improvement vests immediately in the owner, it would be right for the value of the asset to be increased by adding to previous cost the expenditure on the addition or improvement in question.

Practical Example

For the sake of illustration, one could assume that a company owned two trade investments each of the same amount of cost, and assume further that each of the two companies invested in made profits of the same amount, and further that the policy of the directors of the one company was to retain 50 per cent of earned profits in the business for expansion, whereas the policy of the directors of the other company was to distribute the whole of the profits and raise capital from outside the business to meet the cost of expansion. If present-day accounting practices are applied to each investment in turn, in the case of the first company the dividend received, equal to 50 per cent of profits earned, would be credited to profit and loss account by the owner company and the investment would remain in the balance sheet of the owner company at the same figure of cost as appeared the year before.

In the case of the second company the dividend received, equal to the whole of the earned profits, that is to say, twice the amount of the dividend received by the owner company from the first company, would be credited to the profit and loss account of the owner company; and if one assumes that the directors raised the capital required for expansion, equal to 50 per cent of the profits earned, by means of an offer to subscribe to existing shareholders, and that the owner company accepted the subscription offer during the financial year, then the value of the shares in the balance sheet of the owner company would be cost, but cost would include the cost not only of the shares originally held but also of the new shares subscribed for during the year. In this case the directors of the owner company would no doubt transfer, or include in the transfer, to general reserve an amount equal to the cash subscribed for the new shares because profits having been used for that purpose would not to that extent be available for distribution as dividend. After taking into account this transfer to general reserve, one would find that in respect of each of the two companies the same amount, i.e. half of profits earned, would be included in the profit available for distribution as dividend in the profit and loss account of the owner company.

In the balance sheet, however, in respect of the first company the shares would appear at original cost, despite the retention by the first company of 50 per cent of earned profits for capital expansion; whereas in respect of the second company the shares would appear in the balance sheet of the owner company at a higher figure of cost, i.e. including the cost of subscription for the new shares, while on the other side of the balance sheet there would appear an increase in general reserve equal to the profits used by the owner company to meet the cash outlay in subscribing for the new shares during the year.

Fault in Accounting Practice

There would thus be a difference in accounting treatment in respect of the shares in each of the two companies, although the only difference between the two sets of circumstances was that the directors of the one company used a different method of financing capital expenditure from that used by the directors of the other company. This indicates a fault in current accounting practice, because in financial terms there is no difference between the two sets of circumstances assumed. The reason for the fault seems to be a lack of recognition that there is an exception to the general rule that fixed assets should not be written up from cost, where there has occurred a tangible or real increase in value during a financial period. In the example illustrated there has in fact been, in the case of the shares in the first company, a real increase in value which would be reflected in the accounts of the first company by an increase in tangible assets corresponding to the 50 per cent of earned profits retained in the business instead of being distributed as dividend.

Where the value of a shareholding in a company has increased through growth, the increase in value can be measured by calculating the current value of a share by dividing the number of issued shares of the company into the aggregate of its issued share capital and reserves including undistributed profits. It would be an advance in information contained in company reports if this value per share were to be included in such reports. If shares of nominal value come to be replaced by shares of no par value it seems likely that companies may include this information to fill the gap caused by the disappearance of the nominal value of shares issued.

A Possible Innovation

A further advance in the realm of company procedure might be for it to become the practice for a company to issue year by year to shareholders shares equivalent in value to profits retained. If this were done, profits retained for capital expansion would immediately be reflected by a corresponding increase in share capital, and a shareholder would know immediately the extent to which his shareholding had increased in value due to profits being withheld from distribution as dividend in order to finance capital expenditure. A difficulty in calculating the increase in real value of shares, due to withholding of profits from distribution as dividend, arises because, if for example the financial year of the company in which the shares are held ends on the same date as the financial year of the company owning the shares, it is probable that the accounts of the company in which the shares are held will not be available in time for use to be made of the information contained in those accounts in the preparation of the accounts of the company owning the shares.

If, on the other hand, the financial year of the company in which the shares are held ends on a different date from the date on which the financial year of the company owning the shares ends, although the accounts of the former company may be available in time, such information will relate to a date earlier than the balancing date of the company owning the shares. Such difficulties can, however, be overcome by estimation – a process which is often necessary in the preparation of accounts. By studying the degree of growth due to retention of earnings in each of a number of past years, the probable degree of growth could be forecast in the interval between the balancing date of the last published accounts of the company in which the shares are held, and the balancing date at which accounts are being prepared by the company owning the shares.

Treatment of Surplus

If shares are written up in value, as suggested, the question arises as to how the surplus on revaluation is to be dealt with in the accounts of the company owning the shares. If the shares are in the category of fixed assets, it is considered that the surplus should be credited to capital, or undistributable, reserve. In the writer's opinion it is best for a reserve to be described as a capital reserve only when the reserve cannot legally be distributed as profits available for dividend. This is a narrower conception than the definition of capital reserve in the Companies Act which reads:

> 'The expression "capital reserve" shall not include any amount regarded as free for distribution through the profit and loss account.'

Unfortunately, there is at present uncertainty as to whether an unrealized capital surplus may legally be distributed as dividend since there are conflicting legal decisions on the point, as is pointed out in paragraph 336 of the Report of the Company Law Committee (the Jenkins Committee) issued in June 1962.

However, the Committee reported that leading bodies of accountants were strongly opposed to such distributions of unrealized capital surplus and that they, the Committee, concluded that such distributions should no longer be legally permissible. If the shares which have been written up in value are in the category of current assets, as they would be if they were, for example, temporary investments of idle funds or shares owned by a company whose business is dealing in shares, it is considered that the surplus on revaluation should be credited to general, or distributable, reserve. In this case the surplus on revaluation would be an unrealized revenue surplus which could be expected to be realized in the near future, so that the surplus could rightly be regarded as part of the reserves available, or at least not legally unavailable, for distribution as dividend.

Weekly Notes

THE INSTITUTE'S EXAMINATIONS

THERE were 2,703 candidates for the November 1964 examinations of The Institute of Chartered Accountants in England and Wales. Of the 2,093 candidates for the Final examination, 948 (45·3 per cent) passed and 1,145 failed. The First Certificate of Merit, the Institute Prize, the W. B. Peat Medal and Prize, the O. C. Railton Prize for the year 1964 and the Plender Prize for the paper on English Law (Part I) were all won by Mr Ahsan Rashid, of London. The Second Certificate of Merit, the Walter Knox Scholarship, the Frederick Whinney Prize (equal with one other) and the Plender Prizes for the papers on Advanced Accounting (Part II) and General Financial Knowledge, Cost and Management Accounting were all won by Mr Daniel Gilbert Wrayford, of Newton Abbot. The Third Certificate of Merit and the Charles M. Strachan Prize were won by Mr Suresh Hotechand Thadhani, of London.

In the Intermediate examination, there were 610 candidates of whom 297 (48·7 per cent) passed and 313 failed. The First Certificate of Merit and the Institute Prize (each equal with one other) and the Stephens Prize were won by Mr John Keith McGuire, of London. The First Certificate of Merit and the Institute Prize (each equal with one other), the Tom Walton Prize and the Plender Prize for the paper on General Commercial Knowledge were won by Mr Alan Charles Turner, of Birmingham. A full list of successful candidates appears elsewhere in this issue.

CHANGES IN IRISH INSTITUTE'S SECRETARIAT

THE Council of The Institute of Chartered Accountants in Ireland has announced with regret the resignation with effect from March 31st next of Mr William Stuart Orr, B.A., LL.D., A.C.A., who has been Secretary of the Institute since June 1955. Mr Stuart Orr is leaving to take up an appointment in commerce. Applications to fill the vacancy are being invited by the Council and an announcement appears on page V of this issue.

The Council has also announced the appointment of Mr Robert Lorcan Donovan, B.A., B.COMM., A.C.A., as Deputy Secretary of the Institute. Mr Donovan, who was admitted to membership of the Institute in 1954, took up his duties on February 1st.

IRISH INSTITUTE'S EXAMINATIONS

THE results of the winter session examinations of The Institute of Chartered Accountants in Ireland are now announced and the names of the successful candidates appear elsewhere in this issue.

In Part V of the examination, the First Place was won by Mr V. H. Cruise, of Dublin, Mr A. F. Chandler, of Cork, was awarded Second Place, and Mr M. P. Donnelly, of Dublin, was awarded Third Place.

The First Place in Part IV was won by Mr J. P. McLoughlin, of Dublin; Second Place by Mr D. R. Little, of Glenageary, Co. Down, and Third Place was won jointly by Mr J. F. Dolan, of Dublin, and Mr G. Eaton, of Cork.

In Part III, Mr W. F. Barrett, of Dublin, was awarded First Place; Mr W. M. Holland, of Cork, won Second Place, and Mr A. C. Wall, of Co. Dublin, won Third Place.

Mr B. J. Singleton, of Belfast, won First Place in Part II; Mr J. M. McBride, of Omagh, Co. Tyrone, won Second Place, and Mr V. A. Evans, of Belfast, won Third Place. In Part I, First Place was won jointly by Mr E. F. Stephenson, of Dublin, and Mr A. H. Tuthill, also of Dublin; Second Place was won jointly by Mr G. J. Lee, of Belfast, and Mr J. M. Thornton, of Belfast.

NEW COUNCIL MEMBERS OF THE ASSOCIATION

THE Council of The Association of Certified and Corporate Accountants has co-opted as members of the Council Mr Paul Callan, P.C., F.A.C.C.A., Mr Henry Hill, F.A.C.C.A., and Mr Edward Joseph Cardwell Jeffery, A.A.C.C.A.

Mr Callan, who is aged 58, is a partner in the firm of Messrs Cremin, McCarthy & Co, of Dublin. He qualified as a member of the former Corporation of Accountants in 1930 and was admitted to Fellowship of the Association in 1945. He became a partner in his present firm in May 1930, and has been continuously in public practice since that time. Mr Callan is also a director of a number of companies both in Ireland and the United Kingdom. He was appointed a Peace Commissioner in 1950.

Mr Henry Hill, who is divisional comptroller of the Frigidaire Division of General Motors Ltd, is 40 years of age and was admitted to membership of the Association in 1949, having served his articles with Messrs John Marshall & Co, Certified Accountants, of Newcastle upon Tyne. Mr Hill joined the London office of General Motors Ltd as an accountant in 1950, and the following year he was appointed to the Frigidaire Division of the company where he was successively accountant, budget controller and assistant comptroller. In 1959 he transferred to the company's AC-Delco Division as comptroller at the Liverpool plant and held this position until taking up his present appointment. He is a member of the Association's Management Accounting Subcommittee of the Technical Research Committee.

Mr Jeffery, who is a member of the group board of Harveys of Bristol Ltd, is 44 years of age and was admitted to membership of the Association in 1955. After wartime service with the Royal Air Force, he joined the Berkertex Group of companies initially as assistant accountant and then chief accountant and financial adviser. In 1950 he joined the Colonial Development Corporation where he held senior financial and executive appointments in Central, East and West Africa.

During 1955 Mr Jeffery became a management consultant with Associated Industrial Consultants Ltd, specializing in marketing, sales development and financial assignments. He joined Harveys of Bristol in 1959 as general manager (sales) and in 1961 he was appointed to the group board of Harveys. Since then he has held further appointments as managing director of John Harvey & Sons Ltd, and chairman of Stewarts of Dundee Ltd.

COVENANT BY SURTAX COMPANY

WHEN a company which is subjected to a surtax direction computes its 'actual income' for the purpose of apportionment among the individual members, is it entitled to deduct payments made to a charity under a seven-year covenant? The answer, according to the Court of Appeal, is 'No' (C.I.R. v. Coathew Investments Ltd, The Times, January 30th).

The company was an 'investment company' because its income consisted mainly of investment income (Income Tax Act, 1952, section 257 (2)) and it was under the control of not more than five persons (section 256 (1)). Because of sections 245 and 262 (1), the Special Commissioners had to make directions under section 245 for each assessment year. In 1955 the company had executed a seven-year deed of covenant to pay £1,450 a year, less tax, to a charity. It claimed to deduct this in arriving at its 'actual income'. Section 262 (a) expressly prohibits deductions which would not be allowable in computing the total income of an individual for the purposes of the Income Tax Act. This provision first appeared in the Finance Act, 1939. However, in the Finance Act, 1946, a new section (now section 415 of the 1952 Act) in effect prohibited the deduction of covenanted payments to charities for surtax purposes. The company argued in vain that section 415 merely provided for adding back the covenanted payment after it had been deducted, and then only in the case of an individual. The Court held that section 262 (2) (a), combined with section 415, clearly prohibited the deduction. They upheld the decision of Ungoed-Thomas, J.

DIVIDENDS AS EARNED INCOME

THAT dividends taxed at the source can nevertheless be earned income is a well-established principle in income tax law. The Court of Appeal has now applied it to a case where the dividends were paid to the trustees of a family settlement and were held in trust for the assistant managing director of the company paying the dividend (White v. Franklin, The Times, January 28th).

Mr Franklin was the assistant managing director of Wayfarers Travel Agency Ltd, in which he owned no shares. His mother and brother owned shares and were anxious to induce him to stay with the company. For this purpose they made a settlement of their shares, under the trusts of which Mr Franklin was entitled to the dividends as long as he was engaged in the management of the company. He claimed earned income relief on them, as being income arising in respect of remuneration, within section 525 (1) (a) of the Income Tax Act, 1952. The Inland Revenue resisted this, on the ground that the dividends were paid under a settlement made for purely family reasons. Of course, if the dividends had not been taxed at source the Inland Revenue would perhaps have been ready enough to treat them as earned income. The Special Commissioners held that the dividends were earned income, they were upheld by Ungoed-Thomas, J., and now the Court of Appeal has held that there was ample evidence on which they could find in favour of Mr Franklin. The question whether the dividends were from property which was attached to, or formed part of the emoluments of the office within section 525 (1) (b) was not decided, but it seems that they did not.

SUPPORT FOR EXPORTERS

ON Wednesday of last week the President of the Board of Trade announced certain new measures on the export drive. The Commonwealth Export Council has been formed under the chairmanship of Sir William McFadzean, C.A., who is also chairman of the British National Export Council; the activities of the two councils are to be co-ordinated. In addition to the Committee for Exports to Canada which already exists, five new committees are being formed to deal with all other Commonwealth countries.

The British National Export Council is examining short- and long-term measures for increasing exports. A special effort is being made to persuade companies already established in the export market (from whom it is expected the largest additional export effort is bound to come) to increase their exports in 1965. Three measures are proposed to help small companies to export. The first of these is to ask major exporters already established abroad to help to sell the products of smaller companies which are complementary to their own. Second, export clubs or groups, several of which already exist based on local chambers of commerce, will be further encouraged. Third, the feasibility of establishing a marketing organization to promote exports of products which are not at present exported or are exported only in limited quantities is being examined.

Dealing with Government services for exporters, the President of the Board of Trade said that the official commercial services available to British exporters were as comprehensive as anywhere in the world. A publicity drive is to be undertaken in the spring to bring these services to the attention of a wider sector of industry. Two additional steps are to be taken to improve these services. First, the B.N.E.C. is introducing immediately a scheme to help inward and outward trade missions. Second, the B.N.E.C. is introducing a scheme to encourage the more extensive use of market research.

As regards export finance, the Export Credit Guarantee Department's direct bank guarantees are to be made available on a broader basis. In the future any contract for manufactures for not less than £50,000 (previously it was £100,000) for which three years' credit or longer is approved by E.C.G.D. will be eligible for these bank guarantees. The clearing banks are extending their arrangements for such finance to provide guarantees at a fixed rate of 5½ per cent.

DIRECTORS AND THE NEW TAXES

THE Institute of Directors has sent to the Chancellor of the Exchequer a pre-Budget letter which highlights a number of things which have been worrying the business community and taxpayers in general. It points out that the proposed capital gains tax will tend to stifle enterprise and urges that the tax be imposed at a moderate flat rate, particularly if applied to gains without time limit, and the gain is to be assessed wholly in the year of realization. Where a long-term gain is assessed an adjustment should be made for any change in the value of money, determined perhaps by the cost-of-living index. The Institute does not seem to have any fear that the value of money will go otherwise than down. Unrelieved losses under present Case VII legislation should remain available for carry-forward. Here the Institute appears to assume that Case VII will not continue to exist independently of the new general capital gains tax.

Asking for the removal of the general uncertainty about the proposed corporation tax, especially as to the rate, the Institute recommends that the rate be for profits to be earned after the Budget, and that computations should be purely on the accounting year basis, apportioned if necessary where the rate changes in the course of an accounting year. Capital allowances ought to go up, to compensate for the fall in the tax rate, and deductions should be allowed for covenanted payments to charities. The smaller tax credit for overseas tax, consequent on the lower rate of United Kingdom tax on the company, is stigmatized as discrimination against overseas trade.

Turning to profits tax, the Institute calls for the abolition of the earnings limit for controlling directors. Apparently it is assumed that a similar limit will be applied for corporation tax. As to surtax directions, it is urged that income tax and surtax be charged on the amount which it would be reasonable for the company to distribute, not on the whole profit. The Institute's letter ends with an almost despairing appeal for simplification or, if that is too much, then at least for clarity in the drafting of legislation.

FOTHERGALE CO LTD – V

LAST Tuesday's episode of this B.B.C.–2 series showed Fothergale's management turning its attention to the problems of creating and developing an export market for 'Castaway' shirts. It was, therefore, devoted primarily to demonstrating the ways by which a small firm can go about making business contacts in overseas territories – in this case it was Sweden – and for so long as the semi-factual approach was maintained, it seemed more likely that this type of programme has a potential value beyond that of pure dramatic entertainment.

However, the temptation to wander into the statistical bye-ways proved too strong for the commercial director, Tom Rudyard, and so viewers were treated to another of those economic seances, during the course of which figures were effortlessly plucked from thin air and with a minimum of 'shirt-cuff' data processing became the basis of decisions that committeed the firm to major policy changes almost overnight.

It seemed that the object of this tedious exercise was to show how, by plotting on a scatter diagram the correlation between expenditure per head on male underwear and national income per head of population, it would become blindingly obvious

by An Industrious Accountant

CHAPTER 262

THE personnel director sounded rather irascible when he telephoned me to call in to see him, but my conscience was clear; the accounts department escutcheon was spotless, so I went along light-heartedly. True, the lowering of his brows denoted trouble ahead when I entered, but what of that? My strength was as the strength of ten. . . .

After the usual preliminary courtesies, Prinny commenced with assumed unconcern. 'You started three new typists last month while I was away on holiday. I don't remember clearing your authorization for them.'

'You didn't, actually,' I reassured him with my best expression of open-eyed innocence. 'You went away at short notice leaving the form unsigned in your desk. But you remember we had discussed the typing pool replacement problem informally in January, when you agreed in principle, so I went ahead.'

Prinny shifted in his chair in some dudgeon. He has a guilty conscience about that holiday; he went off for a three-week spell of ski-ing in Switzerland at twenty-four hours' notice in a spasm of youthful exuberance. But he spent two of the weeks in a wheelchair as a result, not being as youthful as he thought, so now he was catching up on the problems he left behind him.

'You mean that you'd no authorization to engage them?' he rumbled, so I hastened to clarify the situation.

'The managing director signed the form for me, seeing that it was an emergency. It so happened that the two Smith sisters didn't return to work one Monday; the elder one went off with a "Mod" and the younger was kept at home to help nurse mother through the resultant nervous breakdown. Then we transferred one girl to the accounting machine section and another to replace the sales manager's personal secretary who left to be an air hostess . . .'

'Yes, yes, yes,' interrupted Prinny testily, 'that's all detail stuff; let's stick to first principles. Why didn't you contact my assistant? It's his job to insert the newspaper advertisements and to sift the applications.' There was a momentary silence while we pondered on our recruiting protocol which combines the rigid formality of an old-time debutante's presentation at Court with a preliminary sitting of the Spanish Inquisition.

Prinny, as an ex-Navy martinet, insists on having special application forms completed with voluminous details of schools and examinations, and three referees of good character (did an applicant ever in recorded history nominate anyone who wouldn't give them a good reference?) and then he wants at least a dozen people interviewed for each vacancy. His assistant sits in and grills them with shrewd probing questions; a strict medical certificate is required in advance, and so on. You'd think they were recruiting a bride for Henry VIII.

With some dignity I administered the coup de grace.

'Your assistant went down with influenza for a fortnight. Of necessity the office manager telephoned the local business training college to send round their four best girls that afternoon; he and the typing pool supervisor interviewed them and picked three there and then to start the following morning. Subject to medical clearance, naturally, but they fixed that little headache right away, as one of the girls' fathers was a doctor.'

Prinny nearly had apoplexy at the thought of recruiting staff without the aid of Personnel's vigilant supervision, so he had to be mollified. 'It's really most creditable to the training in staff selection that you've provided,' I beamed. 'The office manager proved more than efficient in his selection . . . but, of course, we'd never dream of by-passing regulations except in an emergency.'

I didn't mention, in the interests of tact, that the office manager was interviewing typists when Prinny's assistant was in short pants.

where the export markets were to be found. Enough genuine criticism has recently been aimed at this sort of statistical addiction (pace Mr S. P. Chambers, of I.C.I.) to create healthy doubts in the minds of all but the most devoutly bigoted, and it leads us to regret that the underlying emphasis of approach to Fothergale's business problems should have been founded on the apparent premise that they can be most easily solved by those trained primarily in economic and statistical methods. Accountants, being men well-versed in the practical aspects of business, will know this is not so.

LOCAL GOVERNMENT PROBLEMS

TWO memoranda of evidence submitted by The Institute of Municipal Treasurers and Accountants to the Committee on Management and the Committee on Staffing set up in early 1964 by the then Minister of Housing and Local Government were published on Wednesday. The Institute's recommendations include measures to improve the public image of local government in order to attract and retain staff of high quality.

Local authorities, states the Institute, should be organized in accordance with modern concepts of management and councils in their present form were too large; the Institute suggests that there should be an age limit for membership of the council. In addition, it recommends that members should be paid expenses and reimbursed loss of earnings on an adequate rather than a minimum scale.

The committee system of local authorities is also criticized. The Institute states that many committees are too large and often sit for too long a time; it believes that the number should be reduced and in some cases one committee made responsible for a range of services.

In next week's issue we shall reproduce the memoranda and comment upon them in greater detail.

Mercantile Credit

THE accounts of Mercantile Credit Co Ltd, from which this week's reprint is taken, comply not only with the requirements of the Companies Act, 1948, but also with the Protection of Depositors (Accounts) Regulations, 1963. Complying with the latter requirements entails the lengthy Note 12 to the accounts and the seven subsections to that note.

The main activities of the group have to be set down pursuant to Regulation 5 of the Protection of Depositors Regulations and are described as (1) instalment financing of consumer and durable goods through manufacturers, distributors, dealers and the public; (2) banking; (3) lending of capital equipment of all types; and (4) short-term bridging finance, including building finance.

The notes to the accounts show that car hire-purchase dominates the hire-purchase end of the group's operations, but, in recent years, the Mercantile Credit group has materially broadened its sphere of financing activity and pioneered the new concept of equipment leasing in this country, through its Mercantile Leasing subsidiary based on London and operating eight regional offices.

Proper Method

Sir Mark Turner, the chairman, goes to some lengths to explain, in his annual statement, the leasing operation and the group's accounting policy in that sphere. In conjunction with the parent company, Mercantile Leasing buys plant and equipment which is leased on terms which, 'if compared with interest payments on other methods of financing represent a very fine borrowing rate indeed'.

This, Sir Mark says, is made possible by the fact that 'we receive the benefit of the investment and other capital allowances on the new plant we purchase and the lease, which reduces our liability to tax'. The benefit from these tax allowances is spread over the period of the transactions. In the latest accounts the appropriate credit from these allowances is £240,000, compared with £100,000 previously.

It is estimated that over £1 million will be released from the tax equalization account to profit over the future life of agreements now on the books. 'I am sure', Sir Mark says, 'that this is the proper accounting method for this type of business.'

He hastens to add that it does not follow that less tax is paid by the leasing company and its customer taken together but it does mean that the lessee, though not owning the equipment, has full use of it on attractive terms which the leasing company is able to offer as a direct result of its own improved position after tax.

Acceleration

FOR the third time in the two and a half years since he became chairman of Harper Engineering & Electronics Ltd, Mr Leonard J. Matchan, F.A.C.C.A., has presented annual accounts to shareholders. As he reminds them, the first of the reports put before shareholders related to a period which ended almost twelve months before.

The 1963 report, however, was produced within eight months from the end of the financial year and the 1964 report for the year to June 30th, covering the first full year of the present board's stewardship, was presented only five months from the financial year-end. The improvement of the time-table reflects more efficient organization and also a better trading position.

The 1963–64 accounts provide all the information recommended by the Stock Exchange and of particular worth is an Analysis of Results which takes the following form:

Analysis of Results

	Trading Profit		Sales		Profit on sales
	Net before tax	Per cent of total	Excluding inter-group sales	Per cent of total

	272,921	100·0	6,204,873	100·0	4·4

The organization of the group into four main divisions has clarified the operations of a company which before Mr Matchan came on the scene was a prime example of an industrial holding company pushed ahead apparently haphazardly and with insufficient attention to management and control.

Modest Satisfaction

The group is now reduced to twelve effective operation units. Each is now basically profitable on its own. The pre-tax profit of £272,921 for the past year, however, still leaves the group profit and loss account in deficit to the extent of £156,546. Further than that, the group is still heavily overdrawn. Bank indebtedness stood at £1,290,192 at the end of the financial year but, nevertheless, this was a very material reduction from the 1963 level of £2,109,348.

Mr Matchan is therefore able to report 'considerable progress and cause for modest satisfaction' but comments that 'we are not quite "out of the wood" yet'. Even if shareholders in Harper Engineering will obviously have to wait for some time yet before a return to dividends can be contemplated, they can at least see that steady progress towards that position is being achieved.

What is more, they can judge that progress through informative and lucidly set out accounts presented with a dispatch – but probably even now not as promptly as Mr Matchan would like – which indicates major improvement in internal administration and efficiency.

3. Guarantees

The company has given guarantees to bankers and others in respect of advances to its English and Irish subsidiaries.

4. Unearned finance charges

	Group		Mercantile Credit Company Limited
The unearned finance charges shown in the balance sheet have been calculated as heretofore by attributing an appropriate part of total finance charges to instalments receivable after the date of the balance sheet covering financing and collection costs and future profit.	%	1963 %	%	1963 %
Unearned finance charges expressed as a percentage of hire purchase debtors	9·84	9·90	10·03	10·16

5. Other instalment debtors and loans

Finance charges receivable on these debtors and loans are calculated at periodic intervals as they fall due and are then included in the accounts. Consequently there are no unearned finance charges in this asset at the balance sheet date.

South African currency has been converted at R2 to £1 and Rhodesian and East African currencies have been converted at par with sterling.

11. Financial year of overseas subsidiaries

The directors are of the opinion that coincidence of the financial year of the subsidiaries in South Africa, Rhodesia and East Africa with that of the parent company would delay the submission of these consolidated accounts. Therefore the figures incorporated therein in respect of those subsidiaries are made up to 30th June, 1964.

CITY NOTES

ALTHOUGH the equity sections of the stock-market seem to move in fits and starts the under-tone stays reasonably firm. The basic reasons are the recovery in sterling, evidence of rising industrial production at the end of last year, hopes of a reduction in Bank rate and the fact that the Budget is still far enough off for any doubts on that score to be kept conveniently in the background.

One prominent stockbroking firm, in its latest market review, says that 'the present situation so far as investors are concerned contains some tantalizing elements of hope, together with good reason for considerable caution'.

The main reason for caution, the brokers feel, is in the prospect that industrial profits this year will in general level out, if not actually turn down. They suggest that 'it would not seem wise to follow the present strength of markets generally on either political or economic grounds very far at the present time'.

That, it may be said, is a typical appraisal of the market under current conditions. The flow of good 1964 and 1964–65 profit figures could well underwrite the present level of the equity markets, but doubts on 1965 and 1965–66 earnings levels may take a hand before long.

AT the Overseas Bankers' Club banquet in Guildhall, the Chancellor of the Exchequer announced that Government spending estimates this year will be much higher than last year and Lord Cromer, Governor of the Bank of England, made a strong appeal for restraint in central and local government spending.

This is not the first time that the Chancellor and the Governor have been on opposite sides of the fence. Lord Cromer made the point that the private sector of the economy invariably has to bear the brunt of restriction but without 'comparable restraint in those other areas of activity subject to central and local government control'.

It was imperative, Lord Cromer said, to redeploy resources so as to concentrate on activities contributing most to economic strength. 'Attractive amenities at home so extensively being provided by local authorities might have to be deferred.'

IF every British company did as well overseas as the Leyland Motor Corporation, trade gap problems would shrink to insignificance. Of Leyland's 1964 turnover of £202 million, overseas sales accounted for £102 million with direct exports amounting to £66 million. Leyland plan to increase the overseas figure by £30 million this year.

Much of Leyland's overseas success turns on the establishment of production and assembly companies overseas with local participation in the equity of those companies.

IMPERIAL CHEMICAL INDUSTRIES is offering its overseas sales services to British industry. The company 'is willing to consider arranging for its overseas companies to take on additional export agencies for British principals where products can suitably be sold alongside I.C.I. products'. Last year, I.C.I. companies overseas sold, as direct exports from Britain, goods worth about £6·5 million for some one hundred and fifty British companies for whom they act as selling agents. I.C.I.'s own exports last year rose by £13·8 million to a record £128·6 million.

I.M.T.A. STATEMENT

Short-term Loans of Local Authorities

The following statement replying to criticism of short-term borrowing by local authorities has been issued by The Institute of Municipal Treasurers and Accountants.

THERE has been some criticism from a representative of a joint-stock bank that during the crisis the withdrawal of 'fugitive money' from London was accentuated by large sums of foreign-owned sterling placed as short-term loans with institutions including local authorities. It has been argued that when some of this money was abruptly withdrawn, the banks came to the aid of the borrowers, although the banks' advances were fairly high, and that this aspect of the crisis demonstrated the unfortunate consequences when undertakings with no banking business or experience bid for money against the banking system and then lean on it for extricating themselves from a situation into which they should never have entered.

Whilst it is right that the appropriate lessons should be drawn from the crisis, it is important that criticism should distinguish between the cause and effect, and should not be made solely from a sectional point of view.

The financial crisis was a crisis for the country as a whole and was related to national economic, financial and political considerations. The capital expenditure by local authorities accounts for over one-seventh of the country's total capital expenditure, and the greater proportion of this is financed from loans. Such is the scale of local authorities' borrowing, therefore, that the general withdrawal of sterling from London cannot fail to have an effect on local authority borrowing. Whatever the arrangements are for local authority borrowing, a financial crisis for the country is also a financial crisis for local authorities, and the main point that needs to be made about the recent unusually sharp crisis is that, partly with the help of the joint-stock banks but also with the help of other institutions and the initiative of local authority treasurers, the position is contained. Local authority treasurers have long experience of borrowing on a large scale, and during the crisis maintained close contact with the appropriate authorities.

Whatever views are held about short-term loans, the volume of short-term borrowing of local authorities is already in the process of being regulated. In 1963 the Government decided to control the ratio between short- and long-term borrowing by local authorities, and prescribed that a local authority's short-term borrowing for up to twelve months shall not exceed 20 per cent of its outstanding loan debt or, if higher, one and one-third times its capital expenditure in the previous twelve months. Those local authorities whose short-term borrowing was in excess of 20 per cent are allowed four years from April 1st, 1964, in which to make a progressive reduction to this limit. The limit to short-term borrowing was prescribed in the interests of the Government's monetary management, and because of the implications on the balance of payments position of a large volume of local authority short-term debt, and has been accepted in the national interest by local authorities and their associations.

The main question is essentially that of allowing local authorities facilities to contain the volume of short-term loan within the prescribed limits.

Local authorities obtain long-term loans either by the issue of local mortgages, by advances from the Public Works Loan Board, or by issues of stock and bonds on the stock exchange. Local authorities are obtaining all the funds that can reasonably be obtained from the issue of local authority mortgages. The amount of capital expenditure which can be financed by the Public Works Loan Board is limited by the central Government, and in the past few months access to the stock exchange for other long-term loans has been severely restricted by the authorities. If local authorities are to contain the proportion of their borrowing which is short-term, then either they need to be given the opportunity of raising an increasing volume of long-term money or capital programmes of the scale to which the nation currently assumes will be carried out, will need to be cut. This is the position which local authorities and their treasurers are in now.

The recent criticism carries with it the implication that institutions, including local authorities, should not compete with the joint-stock banks for temporary money, and that the banks should have a monopoly of this market. It follows from this that institutions should rely solely on banks for short-term loans. This raises a number of fundamental questions. What guarantee is there that a change in the mechanics of this nature would markedly change the rate of withdrawal of sterling from London in a similar crisis? Are individual joint-stock banks to be responsible for determining the amount of short-term money to be lent to local authorities? If so, are they to be put in a position of indirectly determining the capital expenditure on public services? Will not the amounts of the advances fluctuate markedly from time to time – for example, at the end of the year for the banks' practice of 'window dressing'? What relationship would exist between the joint-stock banks, local authorities, and those central Government departments responsible for the pace and direction of the development of essential public services? How far should the argument be carried that it is improper for institutions other than banks to compete for short-term money?

RECORD OFFICE EQUIPMENT EXPORTS

Exports of office equipment in 1964 totalled £52,875,884 – an increase of 3·8 per cent compared with 1963 and the highest figure ever recorded by the business equipment industry.

Of the total exported, £40,660,729 comprised office machinery and £12,215,155 other business equipment such as safes, desks and filing systems. The largest single importer during the year was Australia (nearly £5½ million) followed by France (nearly £3½ million) the United States (£3¼ million) and West Germany (£3 million).

Announcing the year's figures at a luncheon of the Business Equipment Trade Association held on Thursday of last week, Mr C. A. Levett, President of the Association, referred to the need for a decision regarding decimal coinage. With each year that passed, he said, the cost of conversion increased and problems were also created in planning for the conversion work involved. Lord Snow, Parliamentary Secretary, Ministry of Technology, who was the principal guest, stated that the matter was still being carefully examined but it was hoped to give an answer before long – probably by the end of the year.

Receipts, receipts, receipts . . . some typed, but many scribbled and often illegible. A nightmare for the man who has to check them.

When executives' expense accounts drive company secretaries up the wall

FEW routine jobs are more tedious or less rewarding than checking the details of an expense account. So these days shrewd company secretaries enroll their executives as members of the Diners' Club. The Diners' Club credit card enables a member to stay at almost any hotel on credit, and also to eat, drink, travel and entertain—at home or abroad—at the best places within the scale approved by his firm. His expenses are looked after automatically by the Club, who keep accounts for him and send him a fully itemised statement which is acceptable to the tax authorities as proof of expenditure. This one clear statement takes the place of a mass of receipts. One monthly cheque to the Diners' Club pays the expenses of all executives who are members. And the only cost is the small annual membership subscription—there is no interest charge whatever for credit.

Each member receives a monthly statement itemising all his expenses in a form acceptable to the tax authorities.

£14,535.0.0

£10 a month invested over the last twenty years (January 1st, 1944, to December 31st, 1963)

would have provided a plan-holder, aged 44, today with life cover of £14,535 or a capital sum of £9,861 – for a total investment of £2,400 not taking into account tax relief.

A.V.S.P. is a completely new plan offering the advantages of Unit Trust investment with an exceptional ever increasing family security benefit.

This advertisement has been appearing nationally for some months. We find a great many of our clients rely on the advice of their accountants or taxation advisers. We would therefore invite your attention to the following special features:

CAPITAL GAINS TAX. The contract is written as a with profits insurance policy.

COLLATERAL. Full whole life cover from inception plus the units purchased give a growing collateral year by year.

INVESTMENT THROUGH SAVE & PROSPERS' INVESTMENT-TRUST-UNITS

You can be assured in that the investment element of the plan is with one of the oldest and most successful Unit Trusts in this country – Investment-Trust-Units – part of the Save and Prosper Group whose funds exceed £150 million.

Please help us to FIGHT CANCER

In the Imperial Cancer Research Fund's up-to-date laboratories, every weapon of modern science is being used to fight all forms of cancer, including leukaemia. £750,000 is needed every year. Please help the I.C.R.F., founded on the initiative of the Royal Colleges of Physicians and Surgeons, and now one of the world's great research centres, to further its urgent work. Every shilling is needed now.

The I.C.R.F. laboratories in Lincoln's Inn Fields rely entirely on public support. Research is costly. £750,000 is needed every year to continue the fight against human suffering. Will you help us to fight cancer with modern equipment and trained minds?

Our door is open . . .

. . . to firms feeling that they could benefit from becoming members of the Thomas Tilling family which, dispersed over a wide field of industry, already comprises over one hundred firms with some 20,000 employees. Members manage their businesses in their own way but enjoy the relief and satisfaction which derive from linking with an organisation dedicated to progress. With the financial support and close co-operation of Thomas Tilling they have been able to develop more quickly and on a broader basis than if they had chosen to stay on their own. They retain their individuality and their employees.

There is room for more hand-picked companies, with top, forward-looking managements whose emphasis is on growth and expansion.

No absolute bar is placed on the nature of the business but the tendency is to seek concerns which can benefit from the knowledge and experience of existing members, or vice versa.

This announcement is principally addressed to owners of private companies, who for the reasons outlined above, or perhaps for death duty purposes, contemplate sharing their responsibilities. If you are one of those why not get in touch with us?

The Institute of Internal Auditors

(Incorporated in November 1941 under the laws of the State of New York.)

The Institute is the outgrowth of the belief on the part of internal auditors that an organization was needed to develop the true professional status of internal auditing, and that a medium should be provided for interchange of ideas and information among those engaged in its practice.

The Institute has seventy-five Chapters distributed in four Continents with a total membership of over 5,500 representing 2,300 organizations.

UNITED KINGDOM

Chapters meet in London, Manchester, Newcastle upon Tyne, Birmingham, Glasgow, Yorkshire (usually meeting in Leeds).

CLASSES OF MEMBERSHIP

(a) Members. – Open to persons who are responsible in a managerial or supervisory capacity for the Internal Auditing activities with their organization.

(b) Associate Members. – Open to practising accountants and others whose work is closely related to Internal Auditing.

(c) Junior Members. – Open to persons who perform internal auditing functions but have no administrative or supervisory duties in connection therewith.

Membership includes the receipt of a quarterly periodical, annual conference papers and research reports.

Techniques of Communications in Business

by C. S. Deverell, M.A., B.Sc.(Econ.), B.Com., F.C.I.S., A.M.B.I.M.

Communication has been called one of the oldest skills of a director. It generates power for any organization. 'Without ability to motivate by means of the written and spoken word or the telling number a manager cannot be successful,' wrote Peter Drucker in his book The Practice of Management. Most of us concerned in business, industry, public administration or training would therefore like to write and speak more effectively, whatever the level of our present attainment. We have to interview, write reports, attend conferences and discussion groups, speak at meetings, and get the most we can from suggestion schemes.

We are equally aware that the complexities of business today call for skill and training, if shortcomings in communication are to be removed.

There is more than one approach to the subject. The author has chosen to concentrate on the passing of information between men and women in business rather than the collection of intricate data made possible by the advances of technology.

His book will be of inestimable service to managerial and professional students, but it is more than a textbook. It is a practical guide, with all its examples drawn from business. It should also stimulate those engaged in industrial and commercial training. Its author believes that one of the most obstinate difficulties we face is that of maintaining a high level of freshness, enthusiasm and creativity. How can we make certain that the right information reaches the right people in the right form at the right time? Has the exercise of the techniques of communication been given sufficient prominence in executive training programmes? This book is above all a review and an opportunity for personal stocktaking. All managers should find something in its pages which they can profitably read.

PARK WORKS HUDDERSFIELD

AGED ABOUT 26

One will be directly responsible to the Chief Accountant and the other to the Comparison Manager. The first post has been caused by promotion, the second is a new one.

Chief Accountant's staff. The critical investigation of the financial accounting methods and procedures at present in use, in order to introduce and implement new or changed ways of providing information for management.

Comparison Manager's staff. Value analysis and the measurement of movements in productivity in all activities of our business; in particular to assist our technical division in calculating the returns on capital expenditure projects.

Both will be based at York, where we employ some nine thousand men and women in the manufacture of such products as Black Magic, Kit Kat, Aero, Smarties and Polo Mints. Factory and offices are on the outskirts of York, and the price of houses is reasonable, the journey to work easy. Besides our York headquarters, we have a branch factory near Newcastle upon Tyne, and associated companies in England, Scotland, Eire, Holland, Germany, Canada, South Africa and Australia.

We should prefer men with experience, if possible in a competitive consumer industry, but lack of it will be no handicap if sound professional training is coupled with the ability to work as a member of a team.

Starting salaries will be competitive – based on the experience and qualifications you can offer. We normally fill all our senior posts from within the company, and opportunities also exist for transfer or promotion to other divisions of the business, or to our associated companies.

Please write for application form, quoting reference J.8, to

PROBLEM: Understanding complex records instantly
SOLUTION: Twinlock at-a-glance Visible Record Systems...

LOOK FOR—OR LOOK AT?
Your first need—and Twinlock's first consideration—is visibility. Twinlock achieve it by clever design of printed sheets—by producing ingenious binders and visible records that literally bring information to your fingertips!

RECORD LIBRARY
Most business needs are predicted by Twinlock's unrivalled library of visible records sheets: have a word with your usual Supplier. Your special, non-standard requirements are looked after by our Systems Dept.

ALL CHANGE
Records information must be easily located—then re-located, reshuffled, added to and subtracted from. Difficult? Not a bit of it. Twinlock mechanical 'shift' binders let you make a space or close a gap, locate information instantly.

AND THERE'S A BOOKLET
It goes into principles and practices—describes visible-record 'packaged' outfits—complete systems ready for instant use. Whatever your business, whether one-man or international, let Twinlock put the facts and figures at your fingertips!
